Early Physical Collections

Mesopotamia (present day Iraq)

- Earliest known libraries are 4,000 years old
- Collections of carved stone tablets

Early European Print Collections

- Early books handwritten
- Moveable type and printing press invented in Europe about 1450
- Printed library book catalogs developed in 1600's
- No standardized cataloging rules or library cooperation
- Early library catalogs are “classed” (subject) catalogs only

Antonio Panizzi (1797-1879)

- British Museum Library curator (beginning in 1836)
- Developed author catalog
- Created 91 rules for cataloging (published 1841)
- Distinguished between a “work” and a “book”

Nineteenth Century

- Charles Jewett (1816-1868)
 - Developed cataloging code of 39 rules
 - Designed detailed subject index with multiple entries and cross references
 - Had idea for national union catalog
- Charles Cutter (1837-1903)
 - Developed cataloging code of 205 rules
 - Introduced dictionary catalog in order to interfile authors, titles, and subjects
 - Created Expansive Classification and Cutter Number Tables
- Melvil Dewey (1851-1931)
 - Helped write and later revise 1883 American Library Association cataloging code
 - Invented card catalog
 - Developed Dewey Decimal Classification System

Early Twentieth Century

- Limited cataloging cooperation in the United States before the 20th century
- America Library Association began to develop standardized cataloging code for American libraries (1900)
- Library Association of the United Kingdom joined this project (1902)
- Catalog Rules: Author and Title Entries (1908)
 - First successful international cooperative cataloging project

Seymour Lubetzky (1898-2003)

- Librarian at Library of Congress and at University of California at Los Angeles (UCLA)
- Revised the 1908 American Library Association cataloging code
- Published Rules for Descriptive Cataloging in the Library of Congress (1949) and Cataloging Rules and Principles (1953)
- Emphasized distinction between a “work” and a “book”

Late 20th and 21st Centuries

- Anglo-American Cataloging Rules (1967)
- 2nd edition of Anglo-American Cataloging Rules (called AACR2) (1978)
- Anglo-American Cataloging Rules revisions published (1988, 1998, 2002)
- New cataloging code called RDA (Resource Description and Access) currently under development

OCLC - Origins

- Online Computer Library Center
- Began operations in 1971
- Online union catalog originally containing holdings of 54 academic libraries from state of Ohio
- Otterbein University library was an original member of OCLC

OCLC – Cataloging

- Facilitates sharing of records for use among its members through “copy cataloging”
- Permits member libraries to add new records to the OCLC union catalog through “original cataloging”
- Uses MARC (Machine-Readable Cataloging) encoding standards
 - Accepted as international standard digital bibliographic format (1973)
 - MARC 21 adopted (1999)

OCLC - International Collaboration

- 72,000 member libraries in 70 countries
- Provides many other library services besides cataloging
- WorldCat is OCLC's publicly viewable online catalog

OhioLINK

- Maintains online union catalog including holdings of 89 member libraries from the state of Ohio
 - Includes nearly all academic libraries, plus the State Library of Ohio and two large public libraries
- Includes 48 million item records
- Otterbein University library is a member of OhioLINK

Cooperative Cataloging in OPAL

Catalogers must:

- Attain similar level of shared expertise
- Agree to follow the OPAL Cataloging Standards and Procedures Manual
- Have support from library directors
- Have open and accessible communication
- Be involved in both institutional cooperation and individual collaboration

New Cataloging Challenges

- Electronic formats
- FRBR (Functional Requirements for Bibliographic Records)
- RDA (Resource Description and Access)
- Digital collections and metadata

Electronic Formats

- Prevalent trend is release of electronic-only materials
- AACR2 Cataloging Rules
 - Designed for cataloging of print materials
 - Not well suited for the description of electronic materials

FRBR – Theoretical Model

- Functional Requirements for Bibliographic Records
- FRBR model is basis for new RDA (Resource Description and Access) cataloging code
- Also basis for descriptive metadata creation
- Clearly transitions from abstract to concrete

FRBR – Three Groups

- Group 1 - Products of intellectual or artistic creation
 - Work, expression, manifestation, item
- Group 2 - Responsibility for content and production of Group 1 entities
 - Person or corporate body
- Group 3 - Subjects of Group 1 entities
 - Concept, object, event, place

FRBR Group 1

FRBR Groups 1, 2, 3

RDA - Overview

- RDA (Resource Description and Access):
 - New cataloging code
 - Derived from FRBR theoretical principles
 - Loosely modeled after AACR2
- FRAD (Functional Requirements for Authority Data)
 - Authority control plan for RDA based upon FRAD
- Designed for use by the international library community

RDA - Development

- Designed for cataloging of print items and items in new media and electronic formats
- Incorporates metadata principles
- Goes back to Panizzi's and Lubetzky's "work" vs. "book" idea
- Can use with MARC21 encoding standards or with any standardized metadata format
- RDA currently in final testing stages

Metadata and Digital Collections

- Digital collections include:
 - Scanned items
 - Electronically created items
- Metadata is data used to describe a resource or an object
 - Increasingly used to describe items in digitized collections

Metadata and Cataloging - Similarities

- Share common goal of describing data
- Use similar descriptive elements (author/creator, title, etc.)
- Use controlled vocabularies and standardized rules to assure that data creation is consistent

Metadata and Cataloging - Differences

- Metadata must be created based completely on the presence of a digital image
- Cataloging only allows for one level of description while metadata allows for multiple levels
- Metadata standards are simpler and more flexible

Dublin Core Metadata Initiative

- Metadata format designed to provide standardized bibliographic description for electronic resources
- Most accepted metadata format used by libraries cataloging digital collections in the United States
- Consists of 15 basic elements used to aid in description and retrieval of electronic items
- No defined order to Dublin Core metadata elements
- All elements are optional and repeatable
