THE EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME

Science Students Go Outside the Lab | Learning in D.C. | Athletes Earn National Spotlight

From the President

Otterbein Students Get the Experience of a Lifetime

s that a bold claim? Yes. And that is exactly as it should be. Our students' academic ability, drive and commitment to earn a college education should be matched by our intent that they not leave this place the same individuals as they entered. A college education from Otterbein is a life-changing opportunity.

I watch Otterbein transform student lives every day. For some it happens by way of an adventure. Traveling to China was for many students not only their first trip abroad—it was their first trip on a plane. For some it happens through internships that teach professional lessons that last a lifetime. For some it happens through a professor's mentoring. As one senior so aptly noted in her final Tan & Cardinal column, "the professors at Otterbein are really something special to this institution."

You will read about just a few of the meaningful ways our faculty and programs work to further enhance a student's learning—whether through presenting original scientific research at a national conference; competing on a national athletic playing field; or applying knowledge in real-world applications that range from producing professional CD recordings to handling crisis communication.

Opportunities like these are important. Not only does experiential learning further a student's sense of discovery and understanding—it is also thought to further cognitive, emotional and civic development. Otterbein—alongside Georgetown, Tufts, and three other schools—has been recognized as a national leader in experiential learning. As a result, our faculty and curriculum are helping set the national dialog in regards to this transformative approach to learning.

As powerful as these experiences are, they are pieces of the whole. It is the total sum of an Otterbein education that provides the experience of a lifetime. But you already

In fact, these days more of you are looking for ways to continue adding those Otterbein experiences to your lifetime—whether through enrolling in our summer camp on writing your life story, pursuing an encore career, earning an advanced degree, or participating in programs like the Cardinal Migration. Otterbein experiences change everything.

Did Otterbein change your life? I want to know your Otterbein experience of a lifetime. Please send your stories to experiences@otterbein.edu and I'll share them on my blog with others who believe in the power of this place as much as I do.

Choir Comes to the Rescue

Roger Routson,

I was very pleased to read about the Concert Choir in the Fall 2010 issue of the Towers. Even though I never sang in the choir, I have always said that the choir was responsible for me staying in college.

My best friend and I started classes at Otterbein College in the fall of 1963. He went home the day after we arrived, leaving me alone and feeling isolated and secluded. I was a socially inept, small-town boy and, except to go to summer church camp, this was my first time away from home. In the middle of the first week at dusk I was laying on my bed in Garst Hall by myself feeling lonely, homesick, apprehensive and desperate. I was in the midst of making a decision that may affect the rest of my life: was I staying or leaving. I heard in the distance a faint sound of choral singing. The faint sound was followed by an angelic crescendo of the old spiritual, Going Home. Had a spiritual attendant come to lift my burden? The upper-class choir members had come to serenade the freshmen. The voices were soothing. How did they know I was feeling hopeless? They had walked that path. That was a gift of support and perhaps an answered prayer. I felt at home. I decided to stay.

English Language Program Attracted Foreign Students

To the Editor:

As a long-time and dedicated supporter of internationalizing college campuses and of cross-cultural learning, I was not only excited by the international focus of the Fall 2010 issue of Otterbein Towers, but very happy to learn that Otterbein has established and staffed a new Center for International Education and Global Engagement. Also gratifying is the handsome award to the University from the Association of American Colleges and Universities to further the development of its intercultural programs. This award brings both honor and splendid possibility to the University.

I was particularly interested in Jenny Hill's article on the history of international students at Otterbein. Some of your readers may remember another important chapter in that history – the existence of an English Language Program (ELP) which was established in 1977 to attract foreign students and give them instruction in English and which continued until 1990.

Roger Neff, Chair of the Foreign Language Department, initiated the program, and members of the department, including James Carr and Paulette Loop, taught the first classes. Nur Hussein of the English Department assumed the duties of Otterbein's first Foreign Student Advisor, and Meredith Martin in the Admissions Office oversaw the admission of foreign students. As the program grew, ESL teachers were hired to staff the multiple levels of instruction, and in 1983, Holly Harris filled the newly created position of Director of International Student Programs responsible for the co-curricular life of foreign students. Later, Charles Vedder succeeded to this position.

As Jenny Hill's article noted, during the time of the ELP, students came to Otterbein from every part of the world—Africa, the Far East, the Middle East, South East Asia, Europe, Latin America, and even Canadians from North America. At the height of the program during the mid-1980s, Otterbein drew from 50 to 73 foreign students a quarter, representing 25 to 30 separate countries. Students in the language classes comprised between a third and a half of those numbers.

Ms. Hill's article made reference to a group of Iranian students at Otterbein; they were among the first students in the ELP. In the early years of the program, students from a single country were recruited in blocs, and in 1979, 15 students from Iran were registered for the winter quarter, making up the majority of the program's students that year. As noted in the article, this was the very moment that the Iranian revolution took place, and the Shah fell from power. All of our students decamped from class to glue themselves to television sets broadcasting the events from home. The academic program ground to a halt. Several students left immediately. There were nine students left in spring quarter, fewer each quarter thereafter until finally two students from Iran actually graduated from the college. Experience taught us the advantage of drawing students individually from multiple countries.

In 1981, we established a new student position, the International Internship, and appointed Tracey Muschott '85, as the first intern. Her task was to help integrate the language students (especially in the lower levels) into the life of the college. Tracey recruited volunteer American students to serve as conversation partners to meet weekly with the language students. Not surprisingly, a typical response from the American students was that they learned much more from their foreign partners than they were giving. Tracey also set up a "research file" of the cultures represented by our students and the topics they could share. Students were invited to religion classes and sociology classes, for example, and Professor Eleanor Roman of the Home Economics department even organized her World Foods course around the international students on campus to include their typical foods in the curriculum.

Such a large international presence on the campus led to several initiatives. An International House was established by converting a college house on Main Street into a residence for several foreign students (and an occasional American student), male and female in alternate years, as well as a place for events, parties, and meetings with an international focus. A host family program was organized during this time also to provide students far from their home countries with a local contact, a program apparently still vital at Otterbein today. Another important (and still flourishing) initiative was the founding of a men's soccer program. The critical mass of enthusiastic and able students on campus from a number of soccer-playing countries added stimulus to the movement at that time to introduce this sport into the college schedule.

By 1990, however the world had shifted, the flow of language students to the United States had slowed considerably, and consequently the English Language Program was discontinued. Got something to say? Let us hear from you. We welcome your letters to the editor. You may send them via email to rroutson@otterbein.edu or mail to Roger Routson, Otterbein University, 1 South Grove Street, Westerville, OH 43081. The editoral staff reserves the right to edit all letters, and submissions are subject to space availability and suitability.

Nevertheless, at its height, the Otterbein campus benefitted from a flurry of international activity and the enrichment that comes from a large and varied international presence on the campus. Susan Richardson

A Sampling of Comments on the New Design...

I got my issue earlier tonight and just wanted to say very nice! It's so different in some ways (size, paper, fonts used) that I almost wondered if you had hired someone new just to bring a fresh take on it all. It's so much better than the previous design, which in my opinion had always felt stuffy, outdated or something. But anyway, great job! Love the new choices all around.

Interesting about the $3, too. I'm definitely in the 70 percent who get their news from Towers more than any other source. I will consider the $3 figure when I go to make a pledge to Otterbein. Mark Kish '00

Mark, thanks for the compliments, but no new hires on the redesign—just an old dog learning new tricks, good input from the Towers CASE survey, and a lot of research and hard work by both the Towers Editorial Review Board and the Alumni Council. Editor

Otterbein Adds Doctor of Nursing Practice Program

The Higher Learning Commission recently approved the creation of a Doctor of Nursing Practice (DNP) degree at Otterbein University. The DNP program at Otterbein

The Doctor of Nursing Practice program is designed for the post-master's student in an andvanced practice role.

Semester Conversion

This summer will be the shortest on record at Otterbein, because of the conversion to a semester calendar for the 2011-2012 academic year. Classes will begin Aug. 29, 2011, and commencement will take place on May 19, 2012. The conversion from quarters to semesters will make Otterbein more attractive for > transfer students and give current students more opportunities for longer internships and an earlier jump into the job market. All Ohio public institutions of higher education will be required to move to semesters by 2013. For more information about the provides an individualized path for the postmaster's student in an advanced practice role. The program can be completed in two years using a blended curriculum combining online learning, classroom experiences and distinctive preceptored opportunities.

The small cohort class size (the first class has 10 students) allows faculty experts and collaborating preceptors to help guide each DNP student through the planning, implementation and evaluation of a unique transformative change project that positively impacts health care. Students will focus not only on the specialized knowledge and clinical competency to practice in health care settings, but also on financial management, organizational systems, policy and politics, and information technology. Classes began spring quarter 2011 with the launch of the first cohort of students accepted into the program. Applications for the DNP program cohort beginning May 2012 are due no later than Oct.15, 2011. Learn more at www.otterbein. edu/graduatenursing/dnp.asp. 🤇 tterbein University has a new U.S. citizen on staff. Carmen Galarce, professor of Foreign Languages, was sworn in as a naturalized U.S. citizen on Jan. 19, 2011. Galarce came to the U.S. in 1979 after political upheaval and violence in her native country of Chile threatened her career as a professor at the University of Chile. She joined the faculty at Otterbein in 1987.

With a little help and encouragement from her students Professor Becomes U.S. Citizen

Her students encouraged her to become a citizen, even helping her through the application and testing process. "I was never alone in the process since I had the strong support of my students and friends," she said. "I'm very honored to have their support. They are the ones who motivate my work, energize me and are an enormous source of joy. "I had spent over two decades teaching here in Ohio and consider Columbus my home. Every time that I visited Chile with my students, I felt different, disassociated, strange, a sort of foreigner in a familiar territory, until I realized that I had become fully American. I was becoming fully invested in U.S. politics. I want to vote, support, and defend the way of life here in Columbus, OH, and the United States," Galarce said.

Galarce has received many notes of congratulations, including a letter from Federal Judge James Graham and a gift from Representative Pat Tiberi of the American flag that flew over the U.S. Capitol in Washington, D.C., the day she took her oath. he Otterbein University Concert Choir is spreading Chinese culture throughout the community. Summer Camps Offer Diverse Interests

Otterbein University is offering a great opportunity this summer for middle and high school students. This summer the next hit video game, best selling novel, world renowned poet or Kentucky Derby winning jockey could be formed!

Otterbein Summer Camps are directed by Otterbein's expert and dedicated faculty. Campers will be exposed to innovative technology, creativity and fun! More importantly, they'll also develop skills and interests vital to success in college.

"We're excited to bring students to our campus to experience summer learning in a higher education environment," said Otterbein President Kathy Krendl. "We have excellent resources and are looking forward to sharing them with the community."

Participants get their game on at last year's Computer Gaming summer camp.

The camps are as follows: IMAGINARY WORLDS: Introduction to Game Programming

If you have an itch to create a computer game, this is your chance to scratch it!

SEE ME, HEAR ME: A Theatre Design Tech Camp

Participants in this institute will be introduced to the skills and concepts of stage lighting and sound.

ETHICS BOWL

This camp will combine the excitement of a competitive tournament with plenty of thought-provoking debate.

THE MOVIE OF YOUR MIND: Poetry of the Visual World & Digital Storytelling

This workshop includes two classes, "The Poetry of the Visual World" and "Digital Storytelling."

POETRY SLAM: Introduction to Performance Poetry

Slam is competitive poetry. Poets perform their work in front of an audience while five randomly chosen judges score them from one to 10.

Women's Lacrosse Newest Otterbein Sport

Otterbein recently added a women's lacrosse program, scheduled to begin competition in the spring of 2012. The University has hired 37-year old Stephani Schmidt, a New Jersey native, as its first head coach. Schmidt comes to Otterbein from Denison University, where she served as head women's lacrosse coach since 2001, guiding the Big Red to six first-place finishes in the North Coast Athletic Conference and two appearances in the NCAA Tournament. A 1997 graduate of The Ohio State University, she holds a 46-19 career coaching record.

Volleyball Makes NCAA Tournament for the First Time

The Otterbein volleyball program, under the guidance of fourth-year head coach Monica McDonald, reached new heights in 2010. McDonald and the Lady Cardinals turned in the best season in program history, going 26-7 and making the NCAA Tournament for the first time. Otterbein bowed out in the opening round to eventual national champion Calvin College, but it did not take away from a memorable season that saw the team finish second in the Ohio Athletic Conference and win more games than any Otterbein team had before. Junior Lindsey Russell and sophomore Ally Nagle were named first team all-conference, and McDonald was chosen by her peers as the OAC Coach of the Year.

Eight young women helped take Otterbein women's soccer to new heights this season, all the way to the Final Four in San Antonio.

Eight Seniors.

story by Adam Prescott

ara Carter. Rachel Degen. Lindsey Rudibaugh. Hannah Fairbanks. Cristen Herold. Jenny Knox. Tara Smith. Laura Vasbinder. Eight names, one common bond: Soccer.

With seven of the eight having grown up locally, most had played with or against the others from an early age. Some from age seven, some from age 12, some from age 15.

After competing at rival high schools, all seven arrived at Otterbein in 2007 to play for Head Coach Brandon Koons. Some were already familiar with Koons, having played on his club teams growing up.

They began to learn the college game but encountered an array of struggles in their first season together, going just 10-7-2 and missing the NCAA Tournament. A few even flirted with the idea of quitting after just one year.

Everyone ultimately remained intact to come back as sophomores for a new season.

"We all knew it could be different," said Vasbinder, a DeSales graduate. "Our friendships became even stronger and we just moved forward together. We had a different attitude, we were in shape, and just wanted to be there with each other."

ce of a Lifetime

The group saw improvement in its second year, using their lone regular season loss to regroup and go on to win the conference title. They ended their 2008 season in New York as part of the NCAA Sweet 16, their first time playing on such a national stage.

In walked Fairbanks during the summer of 2009. A Michigan native, Fairbanks had verbally committed to Otterbein as a high school senior but wound up at Division II Saginaw Valley State. After not having an enjoyable experience her first two years, she abruptly decided Westerville would be her next destination.

"I had no idea what to expect and wasn't sure if anyone would remember me, but I just wanted to go where I wanted to be in the first place," Fairbanks said. "It was probably the most impulsive thing I've ever done."

> Tara Carter (left) and Lindsey Rudibaugh embrace after their victory in the NCAA Sweet 16.

Fairbanks, who initially was unsure of having a place to live upon arrival, admitted she felt a feeling of uncertainty. "Once I finally got here I thought to myself, 'What did I just do?' But I quickly learned I was glad to be back playing soccer again, and enjoying it."

The group captured its secondstraight conference championship as juniors, going 20-2-1 overall and falling in overtime of the NCAA Sweet 16, this time in Baltimore, MD, to national power and eventual champion Messiah College, PA.

Many say that match provided a vision and belief of winning a national championship as seniors, but they also point out the importance of just growing as a unit.

"I think we always just wanted to do better than the year before," said Herold, a graduate of Dublin Coffman.

Mission accomplished. The eight turned in a season to remember as seniors, helping guide the team to an undefeated record of 20-0-4, making the NCAA Final Four (played in San Antonio, TX) for the first time in program history. They would bow out to the eventual national champion Hardin-Simmons University, TX, in penalty kicks.

All very competitive, the eight will admit to being bitter about not advancing to the championship match after having been so close. However, it was impossible for them not to emotionally reflect on the journey immediately after that final match.

"We just realized it was over," said Fairbanks. "It wasn't about us losing in penalty kicks at the Final Four, it was about it being the final time we played together."

The Cardinals went 58-4-7 throughout their final three seasons, finishing each season ranked in the top ten nationally. The team ended 2010 ranked third nationally with the top-ranked defense in the country.

"They had an amazing ability to find a way to win, and that's what I feel really marks their time here," Koons said. "Their teams never broke any scoring records, but when they needed a goal they found a way to get it."

It's easy to see and understand the impact the eight made on Otterbein women's soccer.

"The program had been on the national level before, but then fell from it," said Koons. "These girls helped bring it back to that point. When we made the NCAAs five or six years ago, people would say we had a good team. Now that they've done it for the past three years, people say we have a good program."

On top of any win, loss, or tie was that they had done it all with each other, and for each other.

"We're never going to have another reason to get together with our best friends every day... to travel to places, to laugh together and cry together," said Smith, a graduate of Westerville South High School.

"Our team was so special," Herold added. "I liked going to practice, and I had always hated practice my whole life. I'm going to miss riding on a bus, with all of my friends, and laughing so hard. It's just never going to happen again."

The group helped create a following of family, friends, faculty, boyfriends, alumni, and more that will surely be remembered as special.

"I think my parents had a better time than I did," joked Vasbinder. "It was special to have an entire crowd of people that followed us and were so into every minute. We were the ones on the field, but it ended up being all of these additional people who ultimately made up our team."

They reflected on their parents attempting a tailgate gathering during their freshman season, with barely anyone showing up. By the last match of their careers, played 1,340 miles away, the team saw nearly 100 Cardinal fans gathered in the parking lot more than two hours before the match.

> All eight were part of recordsetting statistics, and received honors

The tight-knit group has a lot of hardware to display.

Clockwise from left: Jenny Knox hoists the NCAA Semifinalist trophy. The team piles on after an incredible come-from-behind victory while vanquished Capital players lie on the field stunned. Tara Carter makes a save in the Elite Eight shootout. Rachel Degen fields the ball in the NCAA Sweet 16.

ranging from all-conference, all-region, all-Ohio, and all-America. They understood someone had to get certain awards, but also realized accolades didn't necessarily describe how equally they all contributed... and how great they were as a group.

"All eight of us were huge contributors to the team," Herold said. "There wasn't one that was left out or wasn't good enough. I don't think one individual person will really be remembered over another."

As a result of their success, the team and their avid faithful were able to enjoy competing against opponents from different states, sometimes taking on teams that boasted players from all across the nation.

"We would talk about it on the field during introductions before some matches," said Herold. "It was cool that we were taking on teams that had players from all over the country, and we had a bunch of girls who grew up 10minutes from one another."

The heat of competition was intense and exciting, but Smith says it's the memories and friendships that stand out the most.

"This team gave us a chance to get close to people that we may have otherwise not gotten the chance to know," she said. "Every girl from the team will be at my wedding, and most of my wedding party will consist of girls from this team."

Having witnessed their growth and maturity over the years, Koons knows the game of soccer has provided the eight with the necessary tools for the game of life.

"Some of the things these girls took on in recent years in their personal lives have been tough," he said. "They had little examples from soccer matches where they've tried so hard to succeed and then finally were able to do it. I think those times will carry over to help them when they feel up against it with the bigger situations in life."

Eight names, eight players, eight hearts... filled with a passion for the game of soccer—a bond that has led them through an experience of a lifetime.

Some notable recognition...

Jenny Knox—Otterbein's first female three-time all-America. Also two-time academic all-America first team.

Tara Carter—2010 National Goalkeeper of the Year; 2010 Academic All-America Player of the Year. OAC career record holder in shutouts (54).

Lindsey Rudibaugh—Team's leading scorer all four years (Otterbein career leader in gamewinning goals and second on all-time scoring list).

Cristen Herold—2010 OAC Midfielder of the Year. Single season (12) and career (24) record holder in assists.

Tara Smith—three-time all-Conference (two firstteam selections).

Rachel Degen—two-time all-Region, three-time all-Conference.

Laura Vasbinder-two-time all-Conference.

Hannah Fairbanks—Team leader in blocked shots.

The Cardinal defense, anchored by Carter, Fairbanks, Knox and Vasbinder allowed just four goals in 24 matches to rank first nationally in goals-against average (0.16), shutouts (21), and save percentage (.933).

Real-Life Learning

Real-life learning opportunities are so integral to the overall education of an Otterbein student that they are now represented in the Five Cardinal Experiences. Today's students have more lifechanging opportunities than ever. Being admitted to Otterbein's renowned Department of Theatre and Dance is like earning a role in a Broadway show—the audition process is demanding, the competition is talented, the chances of being chosen are slim, and those who are chosen are destined for great things.

The Department of Theatre and Dance only accepts approximately 36 students per year out of a pool of over 400, which includes students interested in studying general theater, acting, musical theater, musical theater with dance, and design technology. The small classes ensure that each student will receive the personal attention, production experience, and extracurricular opportunities that will lead to successful careers.

Once accepted, students spend three years of instruction, auditioning, working, and performing on the Fritsche Theatre at Cowan Hall stage, all in preparation for their senior capstone of an internship followed by the Ohio Actor Showcase, which takes seniors to New York City to audition for for hundreds of agents, casting directors, choreographers, Broadway producers and more. Seniors qualify for the trip through an audition process.

The senior experience begins with the opportunity to travel to New York City or Los Angeles for a one-term internship experience. From working at NBC Universal to SH Entertainment, internships allow the students to gain hands-on experience in the entertainment world, from setting up and running auditions to calling agents and updating actor catalogs. It allows students to fully immerse themselves in their future careers.

For many, the internships teach them more than they ever expected. "I have had more opportunities beyond what I could have possibly imagined to see how television really works," said Trenton Weaver '11. "From people skills to audition techniques for the camera, this internship with NBC has proven invaluable."

"An internship is a real-life experience," said Jordan Bartz '11. "The college and classroom atmosphere are a glimpse at what real life could possibly hold, but it's not until you're thrown into a city that you really start to understand what's ahead of you."

After their internships, students interested in acting get a unique headstart on their careers at the Ohio Actor Showcase. Established in 2001, the showcase includes students from Otterbein, Baldwin-Wallace College, and the University of Cincinnati-College Conservatory of Music (CCM Drama).

Gala Helps Raise Funds

Each year the Theatre Advisory Board and the Department of Theatre & Dance host a Gala to raise funds for the Showcase venture. In all, the Showcase program has an annual expense budget of $15,000. On average, the student participants each contribute an additional $8,000 in completing the New York or LA internship. The costs for the Showcase include invitations to agents and casting directors, rental of the theatre, and transportation and housing for the seniors.Without the support of our generous alumni and friends, the Showcase would not be possible. If you are interested in giving to the NY Showcase Fund, please contact the Department of Theatre & Dance, 614-823-1239.

Kyle Eberlein '11

Each school gets 30 minutes, or $2\frac{1}{2}$ minutes per student, whichever is less. The process benefits both sides of the showcase. The agents and casting directors get to see 30-40 students from three schools in less than two hours. The students are seen by 150-200 professionals. The Ohio Actor Showcase is among the best-attended in New York City.

The students begin to prepare for the showcase by attending other showcases and auditions, practicing, working on new material, and attending theater productions. They know that this one opportunity has the potential to launch their careers.

"We make it clear to our students that... the showcase is one audition of hundreds in their careers," said John Stefano, chair of the Department of Theatre and Dance. "But for some, the showcase has resulted in immediate work in the profession."

Past performers have landed roles in Broadway shows and national tours based on their Showcase performances. One alumna, Mandy Bruno '04, was called the day after her showcase to perform a screen test for a role in Guiding Light and was cast a week later as Marina, a role that later earned her a Daytime Emmy nomination.

While the dream of landing a role is underlying, most of this year's performers are realistically hoping to earn an agent. "When you have an agent, especially a well-known agent, you have your foot in the door. It's a way to get you really looked at, not just passed along. That's what I'm keeping my fingers crossed for," said Sara King '11.

The goal of earning an agent before graduation is attainable for Otterbein's students. In 2010, at least one-third of the senior class performers were offered agency representation after the showcase.

The senior year internships and showcase have brought many aspiring actors to Otterbein, looking for this oncein-a-lifetime opportunity. "It was probably the biggest selling point of the program. Sure we put on amazing shows and have an amazing program but the fact is there are many amazing programs out there. The difference is the opportunity of a senior showcase and internship," said Bartz.

"I knew about the showcase and the internship when I auditioned for the program and they were like the sprinkles on the icing of the cake," said Barbara Jo Bednarczuk '11, "The showcase and internship have now thrown me out into the real world, but the department has given me the tools and confidence to make the most of my talents."

This year, in addition to the acting and musical theater showcase in New York on April 4 and 5, Otterbein will be joining forces with CCM Drama to do an acting showcase in Los Angeles on April 25, expanding the opportunities for theater students to both coasts.

Real-Life Learning

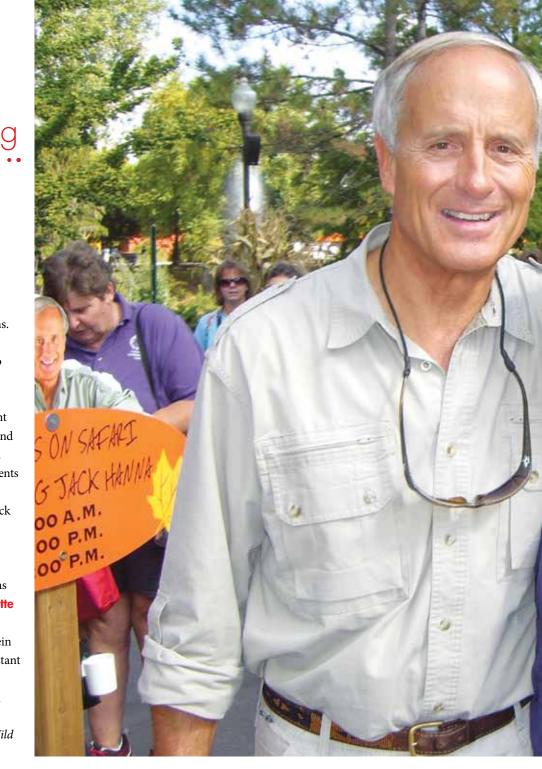

tterbein students have a unique talent for earning high-profile internships and impressing potential employers with their abilities to apply classroom skills to professional situations. These internships, in turn, help students gain valuable experience and network to form lasting professional relationships.

One such relationship has been forged between the Otterbein Department of Communication and Columbus Zoo and Aquarium Emeritis Director Jack Hanna, who has exclusively hired Otterbein students as his personal interns for several years.

The first in the series of Jungle Jack Productions interns from Otterbein was Amy Feller George '07. She interned for Hanna in 2006-07 and made such a good impression that his next five interns – Matt Lofy '08, Erin Sites '08, Charlotte Halliday '10, Leah Shamblin '11, and John Henderson '13 – were all Otterbein students. Sites was even hired as an assistant to Hanna when her internship ended.

For these interns, a typical day in the office could include checking Jack's e-mail; editing his autobiography, My Wild Life; assisting in the event planning and contests; touring new zoo exhibits; writing statements; developing his fan database; assembling auction packages; handling crisis communication; and monitoring website and blog analytics. Halliday even planned Jack's 30th anniversary surprise party, which was a huge success—literally.

"Coordinating a surprise party with over 300 guests for a man who knows everyone in Columbus was a challenge, but we did it," said Halliday. "I discovered after planning this event why people glorify event planning—not because of the long hours, the inevitable crises, the stress, the early mornings with the media, nor the clean up following the event, but because it is incredibly rewarding to see several months of work come together and create a memorable evening."

Shamblin gained an unexpected look at crisis communication. "I was able to see how Jack handled crises, like the tragedy at Sea World," she said. "I also had to research and stay current on the events. It helped me to better understand and apply the strategies I learned in my communication courses at Otterbein."

Otterbein students are using their talents to break into new internship opportunities, too. Erika Bush '11, a business administration major with a focus in marketing, is currently interning with the Capitol Square Review and Advisory Board (CSRAB) at the Ohio Statehouse, a position that is typically given to students from Kent State University. She has played a pivotal role in the implementation and promotion of iPod tours of the Statehouse, the first program of its kind in the nation. "My picture is displayed on the Statehouse website and on Castnet, an internal system that displays events (throughout) the building to demonstrate the ease of iPod tours at the Ohio Statehouse. I have been on NBC-4 and 10-TV news talking about and promoting the iPod tours. I am currently in the process of contacting CNN in hopes of gaining national publicity," Bush said.

Bush brought a fresh perspective to the iPod tour project as a member of a generation raised on technology. "I have an iPod myself, so I'm very familiar with how they work. I have been able to ask the questions that someone who was familiar with the device might ask, while my supervisors can ask the questions that someone might ask who has never used the product. We can cover a lot of ground this way, and develop the program even further," she said.

Through the experience, Bush has gained an appreciation for the relationship between her classroom education and the hands-on learning of an internship. "Applying the lessons learned in the classroom to a real-life, fast-paced, work environment has been phenomenal," she said. "The hands-on learning I have received from this internship gives meaning to the words that I have read from the textbooks, and creates an experience that I can carry with me forever."

Science students get experience in and out of the classroom

All students studying the sciences at Otterbein get intensive hands-on experience in classroom labs, but some students push themselves beyond the classroom to gain professional experience while they are undergraduates with a little help from their professors.

One such student, Lauren Kopas '11, has conducted research on Alum Creek, which runs beside Otterbein and is the main source of drinking water for the city of Westerville.

Her research, "Effects of Storm Events on Water Quality for Alum Creek Near Westerville, OH," was conducted with fellow student Mary Evert '12 and professors Joan Esson and Kevin Svitana to determine how property development along Alum Creek affects the water quality through runoff following rain events.

Kopas and Evert will present the results of their research at the annual meeting of the Ohio Academy of Science, which will be held at Otterbein this year in conjunction with Otterbein's annual Science Lecture Series, featuring astronomer Andrea M. Ghez, on April 16.

"I obtained some really valuable experience in the field and Dr. Svitana was always available for questions or guidance. He was definitely the key figure to my success and motivation beyond the everyday college requirements," said Kopas, who plans to attend law school and practice environmental law.

national research in neutrino physics. Jack Brangham '12 and Molly Clairemont '12 worked with Tagg during summer 2010 on a number of projects involving the MINERvA experiment at the Fermi National Laboratory near Chicago, which is measuring the ways in which high-energy neutrinos interact with matter. More information about the MINERvA experiment can be found at minerva.fnal.gov.

"They spent most of their summers at Otterbein, but each went with me to Fermilab to do some work there and see the experiment in person," Tagg said. A grant from the National Science Foundation funds research by Tagg and two undergraduate researchers for three summers, 2010-2012. He selected the students based on their skills in the classroom, and said that one or both of them may work with him again next summer.

Four students will be attending the national meeting of the American Society for Biochemistry and Molecular Biology with faculty, including Associate Professor John Tansey. One student, Dan DuBreuil '12 has won a competitive travel award to attend the meeting for his research with Tansey, "Characterization of a Perilipin-5 Splice Variant," which he also presented at the Ohio Foundation of Independent Colleges Undergraduate Research Symposium. His research will add to the knowledge to the role of Perilipin-5 in lipid storage and metabolism, which could have applications in diabetes treatments and obesity studies.

"Dr. Tansey has encouraged my research by being available whenever I need help, guiding my progress, and setting up presentation opportunities for me. What I hope to gain is experience in my field, a better idea of what area of biochemistry I should go into for graduate school, and access to opportunities I would not have otherwise," said DuBreuil, who plans to attend graduate school and pursue a career in research.

Assistant Professor Joan M. Esson had two papers published this year with chemistry student co-authors and is conducting research with freshman Cardinal Science Scholar Jared Swartzentruber.

Cardinal Science Scholars is a new program at Otterbein that provides a unique opportunity for students who are pursuing degrees in biochemistry, chemistry, physics or engineering. This enriched educational experience offers scholarships of $6,000 and includes enhanced academic, social, and career programming. The programming includes a weekend summer immersion experience prior to the start of classes; involvement in a year-long mentoring triad with an upperclassman and an alumnus; visits to regional graduate programs and industries; and talks by leading scientists.

"We are working on a new project looking at pharmaceutical and personal care products that might be present in Alum Creek," Esson said. "This summer as part of our Undergraduate Science Research Program funded by the Merck Institute for Education, we're expanding it to include our new biology professor, Jennifer Bennett, and examine if the presence of pharmaceuticals are increasing the anti-bacterial resistance of microorganisms in the creek."

"Being able to start research my freshman year has definitely helped me become more confident in labs," Swartzentruber said. "As a freshman, I'm not quite sure what I want to do after Otterbein because I am still discovering previously unknown possibilities, but I hope to gain a better understanding of what I want to through these research opportunities."

The Bert and Jane Horn Endowed Student Research Fund in the Sciences has helped provide funding since 2007 to chemistry, microbiology, environmental science and biology students to assist with fees and expenses incurred during, or on behalf of, research and research projects. Believing that science is a field best learned when students actually perform research in the areas they are studying, Jane Horn '50 established this fund in memory of late husband, Albert "Bert" Horn '49.

The SINGERS & the UNSUNG HEROES

of Music at Otterbein

rom behind-the-scenes to center stage, opportunities for unique experiences abound in Otterbein's Department of Music. Whether it's the Marching Band entering a Hawaii 5-0 contest in fall 2010 or the Concert Choir performing on the Great Wall of China in December 2010, music is a hands-on experience at Otterbein.

Not many universities have professional recording studios, but at Otterbein the unsung students of MEISA (Music and Entertainment Industry Student Association), a national organization founded to encourage networking and education for students looking to start a career in the music business profession, are recording and mixing professional CDs for the musicians of Otterbein.

Made up of primarily music business majors, but also art majors to help with logos and other promotional material, MEISA runs Red Grove Entertainment, which offers recording services to the Otterbein community. Audio production students can learn on-the-job skills while providing Otterbein performers professional CDs to help advance their careers. When Red Grove Entertainment takes on a project, MEISA students are assigned to a specific task: marketing, budgeting, logistics, and more. "They learn to communicate, negotiate, and organize in a professional manner," said Eric Van Wagner, MEISA's faculty advisor.

Red Grove Entertainment produces one recording per quarter, including an annual CD for The Anticipations. Read more about Red Grove Entertainment online at www. redgroveentertainment.com.

The Anticipations is a pop/rock/jazz ensemble of Otterbein students who perform on campus and professionally in the community. Members can step out as a lead singer, back up the band with instrumentals, or even take a technical role. It all comes together to provide students with the experience of an actual working band. The Anticipations are online at www. theanticipations.com.

Another popular performance group at Otterbein is Six in the City, a student-run vocal ensemble of six female singers. The group performs pop and jazz music at concerts on campus and in the community.

"Singing in Six in the City has been an excellent experience at Otterbein. We've gotten professional experience, plus we've always had tons of fun," said Natalee McReynolds, student coordinator. You can view a Six in the City performance online at www.youtube.com/watch?v=zyJDwOMhQqU.

MEISA and performing music students fall in love with their chosen careers at the annual Valentine's Day fundraiser, Music and Romance. Otterbein ensembles entice large audiences out for a night of dinner, dancing, and entertainment, and Red Grove Entertainment records the event.

Through professional performances and professional sound mixing, students will be prepared for a career in the music industry when they graduate.

Steinberg pulled strings with his Washington contacts to give his students the experience of a lifetime, including national correspondent Bob Orr at CBS News, where they had the opportunity to sit down and chat with a successful reporter. They also toured the production studio, met other anchors, and even sat at the on-air news desk.

Taking the students from the news to politics, Steinberg arranged a tour of the Pentagon through one of his former students. After they made their way through security, they met Maureen Ramsey, senior public affairs specialist for the Department of the Army, who led them on an exclusive tour.

Steinberg and the students also toured the West Wing of the White House. They met with media relations specialists who allowed them to stand on the south lawn as President Obama landed in Marine One, a memory that Ullom treasures. "Going to the White House and seeing the West Wing was an amazing opportunity, but when we were granted access to go out on to the south lawn to see President Obama land on Marine One, we were all shocked. It was truly a once-in-alifetime opportunity. He even waved at us!" said Ullom.

Moving on from politics to sports, Steinberg took his students to a Washington Nationals baseball game, where they walked on the field during batting practice, met with team media relations coordinators and watched the game from the press box. Before they left Washington, the group headed to the NBC news station to watch a live show of Meet the Press with David Gregory and met Gregory after the show.

One trip to Washington has changed the perspectives, and possibly the lives, of three Otterbein students. "The trip really opened my eyes to the world of public relations," said Shamblin. "I now have a better understanding of what I can do with my degree and may even move to D.C. after graduation because of this amazing experience."

Students have been participating in hands-on learning outside the classroom since Otterbein's founding. Those opportunities have changed through the years to meet the needs of our continuously developing society. Here's a look at the evolution of experiential learning at Otterbein.

...and First Ladies, Congressmen, tolk singers, comedians, you name it, this nursing alumna has rubbed elbows with them all

Kay Ball '83 has built an exciting career in nursing that has taken her all over the world, and now she is bringing what she has learned back to Otterbein as a visiting associate professor.

Kay is a leading expert in nursing care of patients having laser surgery and wrote three editions of the only textbook on the subject, Lasers: The Perioperative Challenge. Her book covers one of the highlights of her career—the first laser surgery performed on a dolphin.

In 1993, Kay was introduced to Dr. Sam Dover of Sea World in Aurora, Ohio. He was treating a 16-year-old dolphin with oral cancer, and requested Kay's help. She planned and assisted in the procedure, which required three visits. "The first time, we performed some test spots so we could see how the dolphin responded to being out of the water for the laser procedure. When that went well, we conducted the surgery on the second visit. The third visit was for some touch up work," she said.

After the surgery, the dolphin was relocated to the Sea World in San Antonio, Texas, and Kay stayed in touch with her veterinarians and followed her health. "I gained a lot of respect for veterinarians through that experience, because their patients can't tell them what is wrong. Veterinarians must be astute to the needs of many different animals—birds, fish, mammals," she said.

Kay has lectured internationally on laser, surgical, health care, and nursing issues in such countries as Australia, Canada, England, France, Germany, Hong Kong, Japan, New Zealand, Turkey, and the United Arab Emirates. But it is her work domestically that makes Kay most proud. In 1994, she was invited to serve at the White House to assist with First Lady Hillary Clinton's health care reform initiatives. For three months Kay represented the Nursing Organization Liaison Forum (NOLF), an association which includes more than 75 specialty nursing organizations, such as the Association of periOperative Registered Nurses (AORN), which Kay served as their national president.

"It was interesting to see how slowly the process moved and how something so basic as health care is politicized," she said.

It wasn't all work in Washington, D.C., where Kay lived in the same condominium community as Rep. Joe Kennedy (Bobby Kennedy's oldest son) and became friends with him in the community gym. "I was invited to the Kennedy Compound many times and met almost the entire Kennedy clan."

While working on Hillary Clinton's health care reform initiatives, Kay met President Bill Clinton several times. "President Clinton was particularly interested in health care and the nursing field because his mother was a nurse anesthetist. I've seen him in tears talking about his mother. He is a sensitive man, and I have a lot of respect and admiration for him," Kay said.

Her keen interest in politics still fuels her continued commitment to local, state, and national nursing organizations and with health care reform. She is a Fellow in the American Academy of Nursing (FAAN) and has held national positions and committee appointments in the Association of periOperative Registered Nurses (AORN) and the American Nurses' Association (ANA).

In September 2010, Kay was one of thousands of nurses across the country on a conference call with First Lady Michelle Obama. The nurses were invited to submit questions online in advance, and Kay was selected as the first of three nurses to ask her a question on the call. Kay's was the only question to be answered directly by the First Lady. She asked, "What can the nursing community do to work collaboratively with the White House to promote healthy lifestyles for all Americans?"

Born in Columbus, Kay earned her associate's degree in nursing from the Columbus Technical Institute (now Columbus State Community College), her bachelor's degree at Otterbein, her master's degree at Central Michigan University, and her doctorate degree at the Virginia Commonwealth University. She helped to establish the laser services at Grant Medical Center and Mount Carmel Health, both located in Columbus. Safe Haven Farms a Community for Autistic Eight years ago, Craig Moon and his wife, Melanie Costine '77, had a dream of starting a farmstead community for adults with autism. Inspired by their daughter, Adria, who suffers from severe autism, the Moons have worked with six other founding families for the past five years to create Safe Haven Farms, a non-profit organization offering residential, day and community services for individuals on the autism spectrum, which opened on May 19, 2010, in Middletown, OH.

"It is a thrill to see a concept come to life," Moon said. "We hope to be the gold standard model for future farms to replicate in their community to benefit the kids. We would like to be an autism training center for teachers, college interns and county boards of developmental disabilities."

Safe Haven Farms is a 60-acre horse farm that provides adults with autism the opportunity to live, work and learn on the farm. In summer 2010, adults with autism began moving into the farm's four residential homes, each housing four adults, and the Moon said that the farm community concept is an ideal living environment for adults with autism. "Our farmers plant, care for and consume their garden produce. There are many life skill activities caring for their homes," he said. "The farm provides structure each day so that (the adults with autism) always know what to expect. Our hope is to reduce behaviors with exercise and structure."

Karen Kasler '89 – Broadcasting Journalism

Being Bureau Chief at Statehouse is her Dream Job

As the bureau chief at the Ohio Statehouse News Bureau in Columbus, Karen Kasler has her dream job. "I love that my job is different every day," she said. "I love the news and the excitement of what's happening now, and bringing the news to people who want to explore and examine it. I love talking to people and putting human faces and voices on these issues. I love challenging my perspectives, my opinions and even my fears."

Each day Kasler helps to produce stories on legislation, policy, education, crime, court cases, elections and other critical issues that affect Ohioans for Ohio's 15 public radio stations. Each week she produces, writes and hosts "The State of Ohio," a television show that airs on PBS stations around the state, she said.

Prior to beginning her position as bureau chief in 2003, Kasler had worked for several radio and television stations including WTVN-AM and WBNS-TV in Columbus; WCBE-FM, Central Ohio's national public radio station; and WTAM-AM, Cleveland's news radio station. She also earned a master's degree in 1995 from The Ohio State University through a fellowship in the Kiplinger Program for Mid-Career Journalists.

"I started making connections in broadcasting while still at Otterbein," she said. "I did an internship the summer of my sophomore year and, with the help of a family friend who liked what I was doing at Otterbein, I got a part-time job at my hometown radio station. I used that experience and Otterbein connections to land my first full-time job in morning radio during my senior year." Kasler said the real world experiences

she gained as a student at Otterbein were tremendous. "I was on the air as a freshman. That gave me the confidence to know that I could do this for a living, but also taught me that I needed to work constantly to improve my performance and my writing. I really appreciated the opportunity to be on the air, to have frequent evaluations from professors, and to be a part of the station management and help 'run the show'."

Devon Kuntzman '04 - Psychology

Living Abroad Brings Humility, Enlightenment

In August 2010, Devon Kuntzman left the life she'd built in New York City as a house manager and nanny for a family in the music business, to pursue a one-year position in Rwanda at the Imbabazi orphanage.

"When I arrived in Rwanda, I hit the ground running," she said. Kuntzman is the assistant director of Imbabazi and her responsibilities include being a nurse, gardener, photographer, project manager, communication officer, proposal writer, tour guide, friend, and parent to over 90 children.

In 2005, she went on the inaugural Otterbein trip to Rwanda through her Senior Year Experience course, which recently completed its fifth trip to the country. "I had an interest in traveling to a developing country for many years, so when I saw this opportunity, I signed up without hesitation," she said. "This trip was an awakening and really made a profound impact on the person I am today."

In 2005, Kuntzman met Rosamond Carr less than a year before she passed away—an American woman who, at age

Kuntzman said living in Rwanda has allowed her to pursue her passions. "I feel that the most fulfilling action one can do in life is help people," she said. "In Rwanda, I am able to unite my love for travel and adventures, and my curiosity of the world and other cultures, with helping children who have lost their parents." "I feel lucky to have had amazing professors who truly cared about my future and were great mentors. I use my knowledge of child psychology and child development on a daily basis," Kuntzman said. "More importantly, I feel my liberal arts education is the seed from which all my knowledge and skills have grown. A liberal arts education allows you to be exposed to many subject areas and, in my case, sparked my curiosity of the world and creativity."

Justin Tatman '07 – Athletic Training

From Otterbein to the NFL...and Back Again

Justin Tatman took all that he learned at Otterbein to the world of professional sports. Now, he has brought his knowledge of professional sports back to Otterbein to help students reach their goals. After spending time as the staff assistant athletic trainer for the Miami Dolphins, Tatman returned to Otterbein in fall 2010 as an assistant athletic trainer. "Although the excitement and atmosphere can't be beat (in the NFL), especially on game day, mutual respect from coaches to staff to students (at Otterbein) is pretty well unparalleled," he said.

At Otterbein, Tatman was afforded numerous learning experiences during his four years. He had countless opportunities to work with Otterbein sports teams on campus, as well as internships off campus with Westerville South High School, the Columbus Crew, and the Cleveland Browns. "The opportunities Otterbein provides gave me the opportunity for quality internships and quality role models on and off campus," he said. And not only was he able to work with athletes as a student, he was also able to be an athlete on the Otterbein soccer team for three years. Through experience and networking at Otterbein and at his various internships, Tatman was offered the job with the Miami Dolphins. From his experience, Tatman's advice to new students at Otterbein is to "find something you enjoy and stick with it and network. Meet as many people as possible and never pass up an opportunity," he said.

Currently, Justin is the athletic trainer for the Otterbein men's soccer team and the track and field team, as well as a professor for freshman level courses and one senior course. He said he learned a lot from his time at Otterbein, and he is happy to be able to give that same experience to current students. "I am now able to mentor students and help them achieve their goals, just like my professors and coaches did for me while I was here," he said.

1966 Gift from Italy

The Tan and Cardinal

This silver model of a fishing boat was presented to Otterbein by the city of Como, Italy. The gift was presented to Richard Chamberlain, the conductor of the A Capella Choir, during the choir's summer tour in 1966. The model is that of traditional fishing boats on Lake Como and of Venice.

Cardinal Tales

by Becky Fickel Smith '81, director of Alumni Relations

The theme for this issue of the Otterbein Towers has been "the experience of a lifetime." I hear incredible stories from alumni about various Otterbein experiences which changed, redirected, unveiled, or transposed who they are today.

Perhaps the experience was brought about by a professor, coach, mentor, friend, sorority or fraternity member or athletic teammate.

Whatever experience you might have had, it changed you and has made all the difference to who you are today. For me, it was a seventh grade United Methodist confirmation class visit to Otterbein in May 1972. On that particular Library dedication. day, the Courtright Memorial Library was being dedicated and unbeknownst to me, Otterbein was the place I was to receive my college education and serve for 30 years. In addition, and like 2,400 other alumni, I met my significant other at Otterbein. Was it serendipitous 39 years ago to have visited and experienced a moment at Otterbein which has given me multiple opportunities of growth, enlightenment and challenge with steady support?

What is your Otterbein experience which has changed your life? What doors have been opened because of a recommendation letter, a moment on stage, a networking interaction, a cultural exchange, or a memorable internship? The experiences are endless. I look forward to hearing your lifetime experiences at Otterbein. Email your stories to experiences@otterbein.edu or post on the Otterbein Alumni Association Group Facebook page.

Happy tales!

1456), careerplanning@otterbein.edu or visit the website above. We can help you:

- Revitalize your resume and brush up interview skills •
- Give advice about the most effective job search strategies
- Connect you to the latest online resources including Cardinal Careers Job Board
- Post a job or internship through Cardinal Careers
- Help you locate other alumni for career networking
- Provide career counseling to discuss your job search plans with a career professional to make sure you are on the right track

Cardinal Careers Job Board

www.myinterfase.com/otterbein/employer 🏹

Looking for Otterbein talent? The Center for Career Planning invites alumni to promote full-time, part-time and internship opportunities which are appropriate for students, graduates and other alumni on our online job posting system, Cardinal Careers. These services are FREE to all employers. To use Cardinal Careers, simply go to the website above. Positions on this site will only be visible to members of the Otterbein University community.

LinkedIn

In a LinkedIn profile, all you see is professional information. Because it's strictly professional and doesn't have all the extras Facebook does, it is simpler to use. Most people agree that it is a good resource for finding jobs and employers report it is an excellent tool for finding candidates. It can also help further your career because it can discover your personal connections when you're looking for a job or new business opportunity. Otterbein has an Alumni LinkedIn group with over 1,065 members, and the Center for Career Planning will post exciting job opportunities on the group home page. Alumni Career Survey

Otterbein.edu/alumni/get-involved.asp 🍆

As part of Otterbein Alumni Association's mission to encourage lifelong learning, we developed a survey for Alumni Career and Professional Development. This survey will help us plan future events relating to career advancement. This concept was initiated by two members of the Alumni Council, Dianne Grote Adams '78 and Amber Dinopoulos '93. To take the survey, go to the website above.

Networking With Alumni www.otterbein.edu/alumni 🏹

Career development is all about making connections. Networking events hosted by the Office of Alumni Relations attract a diverse range of professions who all have the Otterbein experience in common. See the website above for the latest alumni event calendar.

Workplace Gathering alumniinfo@otterbein.edu 🔇

The Office of Alumni Relations is here to support you if you would like to host a workplace gathering for alumni in your office or in your profession. Often, since employees span different decades and career divisions, they do not even know they have fellow alumni working close by. If you would like to host this type of event, email us. Coming soon: Nationwide Insurance in Columbus, OH.

Student Alumni Association

The Student Alumni Association is a student-run organization that connects current students and alumni of all ages together. Students gain career connections and life skills; alumni can give back to Otterbein by mentoring a student. As an alumnus/a you can help us by participating in one of our upcoming events!

 Interview Workshop With Human Resource Alumni Professionals May 12. For more information, students and alumni can contact saa@otterbein.edu.

· Dinner With 12 Cardinals . This concept involves local alumni who host dinner in their homes for students and fellow alumni in an effort to assist students with career networking advice in a relaxed setting. If you would like to be involved in the next dinner, contact saa@otterbein.edu. 🏹

SW FL Club

The Southwest Florida Alumni Club capped off another active winter season on March 24 with a pizza party for the Otterbein baseball team and parents after a double header win over Colby College in Ft. Myers, FL. The season began in January with a dinner cruise on the Caloosahatchee River. A picnic at Lakes Regional Park in February featured Chef Bill Freeman at the barbeque. Otterbein Theatre/ Music students Marina Perez, Hannah Barrens, and Anthony Murphy thrilled the attendees with their performance at the annual luncheon at the Colonial Country Club in Ft. Myers on March 19. The Club invites all alumni and families who may be in Florida next winter to join in our planned activities.

Loyalty Lives Here Alumni Club updates and events, alumni

What is your favorite Otterbein memory?

V as it pledging a fraternity or sorority, or clearing brush along Alum Creek during the Spring Plunge, or the bonfire before Homecoming, or auditioning for talent agents in New York? Perhaps there is a certain professor who understood your hopes, dreams and career aspirations as well as you. Those combined memories make up your Otterbein experience—a time that truly shaped your thinking and set your life's path.

Those special experiences still exist for today's Otterbein students and your support makes it possible for each of them to create their own experiences of a lifetime. Please consider making a gift today by visiting our secure online giving site at www.otterbein.edu/makeagift, or by contacting Christina Patel, assistant director of Annual Giving, at (614) 823-1958 or cpatel@otterbein.edu.
