the EDITOR'S corner

Miss Blanche Keck, '13, in a recent letter to the editor wrote, "I am ever mindful of the things I learned while at Otterbein that have made life more meaningful and worthwhile." Most alumni would heartily echo her sentiments.

As another issue of TOWERS makes a visit to over eight thousand Otterbein alumni, our sincere hope is that life is most meaningful and worthwhile for you. Let us hear about your work and accomplishments.

Second Semester Enrollment

A total of 1350 students are enrolled full-time for the second semester at Otterbein. Total enrollment is 1521, including 49 special day students and 122 enrolled in evening classes.

Student Aid Requirement

The Student Aid Committee announces a new requirement for Otterbein students seeking financial aid through the college. Financial aid applicants are required to file a new form - the RPCS (Renewal Parents' Confidential Statement) - each year with the College Scholarship Service of Princeton, New Jersey. The cost of this new service is $1.50 to upperclassmen and must be post-marked by March 30, 1965.

O.F.I.C. Gift Record

Corporate contributions through the Ohio Foundation of Independent Colleges in 1964, set a new record of 1858 gifts, totaling $1,329,189.

Otterbein is one of 33 Ohio non-tax-supported colleges, sharing in this business aid for operating funds, 60 percent equally, 40 percent according to enrollment.

Gifts this year were the largest ever, however, the minimum annual goal continues to be two million dollars in business gifts, if the 33 colleges are to be kept strong for increasing enrollment without tax aid for operating funds.

Otterbein President, Dr. Lynn W. Turner, is vice chairman of the Ohio Foundation.

New Band Uniforms

The Westerville Otterbein Women's Club contributed one-third of the cost for new Band uniforms at Otterbein.

The estimated cost of the uniforms, which will convert from marching band to concert attire, is approximately $6,000. The Otterbein Women's Club contributed $2,000 and the remainder was donated by Mrs. F. O. Clements, '01.

In recent years the Westerville Club has provided new risers for the Music Department, a cyclorama for Hall Memorial Auditorium, and furniture for several campus lounges. All contributions are made possible through the operation of the Thrift Shop.

Professional Guest

Kim Hunter

Guest artist for the Otterbein College Theater production of "Anastasia", March 4-6, was Miss Kim Hunter. A leading lady on stage, screen and television, Miss Hunter was the first professional female guest star to appear at Otterbein.

Miss Hunter has appeared in such films as "Seventh Victim," "Tender Comrade," "When Strangers Marry," "You Came Along," "A Canterbury Tale" and the memorable "Stairway to Heaven."

In 1947, Eli Kazan cast her in the role of Stella in Tennessee Williams' "A Streetcar Named Desire," for which she was honored with the Donaldson and New York Critic's Awards. Repeating this portrayal in the film version, she won an Academy Award. Her film assignments also included "Anything Can Happen," "Deadline U.S.A.," "Bermuda Affair," and "The Young Stranger."

Miss Hunter returned to Broadway to play opposite Claude Rains in "Darkness at Noon," and the theater has also claimed her for "The Children's Hour" and "The Tender Trap." This past spring and summer she toured in a new comedy try-out, "Linda Stone Is Brutal," by William Brown.

Television audiences enjoy Miss Hunter's appearance frequently.

Monolith Specimen

This column of Igneous origin,
is from the Palisades,
That majestic rock formation extending along the west shore of the Hudson River
From Staten Island, New York City, northward for about fifty miles.

Presented by
Fred A. Hanawalt, Class of 1913 and Wife, Loretta Guest Hanawalt.
Mr. Hanawalt taught science at Otterbein from 1920 to 1956.

To stimulate interest in geology,
Professor Emeritus Fred A. Hanawalt and his wife secured a valuable specimen from The Palisades for display on the Otterbein campus. The specimen, weighing over a ton, has been erected in front of McFadden Science Hall.

The Palisade formation, along the Hudson River, is the result of an intrusion of molten material as a sill, the molten material cooling in vertical columns. Such columns are found in many places, one of the most famous being the Giant's Causeway on the coast of Ireland.

The column of rock from the Palisades, was secured through the kindness of Wilson P. Foss, president of the New York Trap Rock Corporation. The actual selection from several specimen's set aside was made by Mr. and Mrs. William T. Orr, Jr. (Alice Guest, x'48), of Danien, Connecticut.

Igneous rock, as the name indicates, is associated with fire and suggests lava outflows, among other formations. In the "growing pains" of the earth great strains and stresses develop, mountain formations resulting. Molten material from deep in the earth may be pressed upwards and make great domes as the overlying strata are pushed upwards, the lava not reaching the surface but forming a great mass (laccolith) underneath.

Such material filling a vertical crevice may be exposed later as a dike. Lateral intrusions between strata are called sills. The rock from The Palisades is from a great sill formation.

The following information concerning the Palisade formation was received by Professor Hanawalt from Y. William Isachsen, Associate Scientist, Geology, of the New York State Museum and Science Service, Albany, New York:

"The Palisade diabase forms a majestic cliff line along the west shore of the Hudson River from Staten Island, New York City to Haverstraw, New York, a distance of about fifty miles. At Haverstraw, the outcrop swings westward away from the river for about six miles. "The Palisades diabase is about a thousand feet thick and is intruded into the Triassic Brunswick formation which consists of red sandstone, shale, conglomerate, and limestone fanglomerate. Along the river the diabase is a sill, although drill holes west of the outcrop show that it arches downward and gently crosscuts the layers of sediments, thus becoming dikelike.

"The sill is generally coarse diabase, but it exhibits chilled contacts. The enclosing shales are baked near the contact. They are locally brecciated, but not significantly disturbed otherwise. About 50 feet above the lower contact is olivine diabase layer measuring 15 to 30 feet thick.

"Recent dating by radioactive methods, indicates a Triassic age of the diabase, specifically 190 million years old, give or take about 5 million years."

Otterbein University During The Civil War

BY HAROLD HANCOCK

The Civil War brought problems to Otterbein University of diminished enrollment, inflation, and faculty members on leave, intensifying the financial difficulties of the struggling institution. From minutes of the trustees and faculty, catalogs, Columbus newspapers, and miscellaneous sources, the story of how the Civil War affected Otterbein University is told.

On the eve of the Civil War, Westerville was truly a quiet and peaceful village. In 1859 the "Prudential" Committee of the trustees organized a community meeting which passed resolutions to make the village "a nucleus of holy Christian influence," to thwart the coming of businesses contrary to the objectives of the University, and to fix moderate rates for the boarding and lodging of students. A visitor in May, 1861, found Westerville a restful haven away from locomotive whistles, the hustle of recruits departing by train, and crowds around newspaper bulletin boards. The daily arrival of the four-horse omnibus from Columbus over a plank road, he compared to the appearance of a boat with muffled oars gliding over water. "Life is real, life is earnest," he reported.

In 1861 the University consisted of two substantial brick buildings (Saum Hall and a Young Ladies Hall), and one frame building on nine acres of ground. In process of erection was a large brick building to be occupied by recitation and society rooms, and a chapel. A library contained 1300 books and others were available in the society rooms.

The curriculum emphasized mathematics, Greek and Latin, Science and Philosophy. Attendance at daily religious services was required. Two terms of twenty weeks each ran from late August to early June. Tuition was $9.00 per term in 1860 and board was $2.00 per week. Some students rented rooms and boarded themselves for 75c per week. By 1864, board had been raised to $3.00 per week.

Prominent faculty members were President Lewis Davis, sometimes called the father of higher education in the United Brethren Church, John Haywood in mathematics and Thomas McFadden in science. The latter served as a surgeon in the army and later returned to teaching at Otterbein. His sword is in the Otterbein Room. Professor Samuel Allen was granted a "furlough" from teaching by the trustees for army service, and President Davis served in the home militia.

Salaries of professors in 1861 were $550, and the trustees apologized for paying only $400 to a teacher of French and Hebrew because of the "embarrassed condition of the college." An attempt to reduce salaries to $500 was defeated in 1862, but was passed in 1863. In 1864 professors with families were paid $600 and others, $500. In 1865 salaries were increased to $650.

Faculty meetings were largely concerned with arranging classes, examinations, the selection of textbooks, and infractions of discipline. College regulations stated that students were not to dance, swear, drink alcoholic beverages, play billiards or cards, join secret societies or militia companies, attend the theatre, use tobacco, leave Westerville without permission, or go on rides or walks with members of the opposite sex without permission. Consequently young ladies were reprimanded for attending a lecture at the new Presbyterian Church with a male escort or receiving male company, entering into extensive correspondence with strangers through an advertisement, leaving town without permission, or serenading. Students who "protracted" a sleigh ride to an improper hour were subject to discipline. Permission to organize an oyster supper in town was denied, and a young man's action in attending a meeting at the Methodist Church without permission was a subject of faculty discussion.

Main classroom building on the northeast campus of Otterbein, with Saum Hall on the right, in 1863.

The faculty arranged for a special chapel service on January 1, 1863, at the time of the issuing of the Emancipation Proclamation. Two members of the faculty had previously written lengthy letters to the Religious Telescope praising Lincoln's preliminary announcement after the Battle of Antietam. Classes were suspended in April 1863, for one day to observe a National Fast Day. In August 1863, the college regulation forbidding a student to be a member of a militia company was repealed, and two months later a room was rented in the new college building for an armory for Company I, Independent Militia.

Enrollment was greatly affected by the war. The number of students decreased from 234 in 1860 to 124 in 1861. President Davis explained the drop by war excitement, financial depression, and students teaching in country schools to raise money to continue their education. The Religious Telescope noted in September 1861, that quite a few students had enlisted in the armed forces from Westerville. In October the Westerville Brass Band of 24 pieces, consisting mostly of students, enlisted at Camp Lyon near Worthington. The citizens of Westerville gave the departing recruits a chicken banquet, which was followed by speeches by Professor Haywood and others. On behalf of the band members, George Hanawalt replied and observed that "the boys did not expect ever to turn their backs to the enemy."

By 1862 the number of students had risen to 147, by 1863 to 171, and by 1864 to 180. The college agent in 1863 had feared no students would appear in the fall because so many were in the army and because of the contemplated draft, but over 100 began the term. The University catalog and alumni directory of 1863 reported that one member of the class of 1860 was enlisted in the army, and three from the class of 1861, while one member of the class of 1862 had died in service, and another was an army correspondent for the Chicago Tribune. The University sent $5.00 to the Religious Telescope in 1863 to pay for twenty-five subscriptions to the publication for three months for men in the armed forces.

In the Otterbein Room is a copy of the war diary of Abraham Bowman Kohn, '70. His experiences were probably similar to many of those who served in the army from the University. He entered the 126th Regiment, Ohio Volunteers, in the summer of 1862 and participated in several bloody campaigns in Virginia before being wounded in the foot in March 1865. Notes compiled by H. Warren Phelps in 1921 tell of the experiences of a number of soldiers from Westerville and the University.

Many veterans later attended Otterbein. When a Civil War monument with the names of those who had served in the war was erected in front of Towers Hall in 1916, 171 names were listed. Later it was rededicated by Vice-President Coolidge in 1922.

While Benjamin Hanby did not participate in the fighting in the Civil War, he made an important contribution to arousing northern feeling against slavery in his immortal song, "Darling Nellie Grey." (1856) "Old Shady, the Song of the Contraband" (1861) anticipated the freedom of the slaves and encouraged their escape. In the Religious Telescope in 1864 he offered to send to each regiment a free copy of his new song, "Terrible Tough," a reply to the protest against conscription. Several years ago this was sung by the Otterbein Men's Glee Club. In 1864 he also wrote "Up on the House Top," a Christmas song still enjoyed, whose centennial was observed last December in Westerville and in many other Ohio towns. "The Nameless Heroine" (1865) honored a young lady who had aided Union prisoners to escape from the South, while "Now Den" published in the same year advised freed slaves to return to work in the South. In these years Hanby frequently visited his alma mater, receiving an M.A. in 1862 and participating in Commencement activities.

The minutes of Philomathean Literary Society reflect the stirring times. In February 1861, a student delivered a "Eulogy on Lincoln," and a debate was held on adopting the "Critenden" /sic/ Resolutions in Congress as a compromise to save the Union. "Resolved, that coercion should be used in bringing back the seceded states" and "Resolved, that our republic is dying" were discussion topics in

WHERE THERE'S A WILL THERE'S A WAY

In each issue of TOWERS some phase of estate planning will be presented. In this issue we discuss WILLS; in our next issue we shall consider TRUSTS. Free booklets are available on any of the estate plans described.

Well known authorities tell us that the majority of people die intestate (without a will). Isn't it strange that so many people spend their lifetime accumulating material goods, building an estate, and make no provision for the way their estate will be distributed after their death?

Failure to make a will can cause pain and expense to those closest to you and defeat the distribution of your estate as you wish.

If you fail to leave a will, your estate will be distributed by law, which is necessarily inflexible and cannot take account of your wishes or the needs of your family. Part of your property will go to your children — not all to your wife or husband as you might suppose; or part may go to relatives whom you barely know or don't like very much; someone for whom you wish to provide, and who needs help, may get less than he or she needs, or even nothing.

Obviously no part of your estate will go to your church, your college, or any charity you wish to help unless you so designate in a will.

What Every Christian Will Contains

1. An acknowledgement of God's goodness and of man's trusteeship of God's gifts.
2. Insofar as possible, in addition to care for his dependents, some provision for the continuance of his interests, as a Christian witness, in the life and work of the Church.
3. Whether or not the will-maker knows it, every Will contains, expressed or implied, a statement of the individual's faith, his world-view, or his philosophy of life.

A Christian Will reflects the Christian's faith.

RECENT BEQUESTS

LEONIE SCOTT

On December 5 Otterbein received a check for $10,842.08 from the estate of the late Leonie Scott, daughter of the late Dr. George Scott, Otterbein president for three years and Professor of Latin for twenty years. Miss Scott lived in Westerville until her death on December 28, 1962. Her will directed that the bequest be used to establish the George and Isabel Scott Scholarship Fund.

MANZELLA FINLEY

Otterbein was informed on December 11 that Mrs. Manzella Horine Finley, M '92, a former music teacher of Bradford, Ohio, who died on November 17, had provided for a $1,000 bequest in her will.

SINCE 1947

Since the Centennial in 1947, Otterbein has received 53 bequests totaling $547,404. The major portion of this amount has been added to the endowment of the college and will benefit students for generations to come.

Basketball Season

Under the capable direction of Head Coach Curt Tong, '56, the Otterbein College Basketball Team advanced to the finals of the Ohio Conference Tournament before bowing to a strong Akron team.

This was the second consecutive winning season for the squad with 16 wins and 9 losses. The team won the Indianapolis Classic and the Ohio Northern Invitational Tournament. The victory over Wittenberg in the Ohio Conference Tourney was the first in 23 previous tries.

Don Carlos, 6 foot, 4 inch sophomore center from Columbus, broke the record for most points scored in an Otterbein basketball game with 49 points against Capital. This broke the old record of 44 points which Carlos shared with Irvin L. Clymer, '09.

Sports Illustrated Magazine featured Carlos in their February 1st issue. He was named to the All-Ohio Conference First Team and was the leading scorer in the Ohio Conference with an average of 28 points per game. He was also the conference's top field goal percentage leader, shooting 57.6 per cent, and second in the Ohio Conference in rebounding with 15.7 per game.

Dick Reynolds, senior guard from London, Ohio, was selected by his teammates as honorary captain. Carlos was voted most valuable player and Mike Grayem, junior forward from Reynoldsburg, Ohio, was chosen as the most improved player. Terry McCammon of Lexington, Ohio, was named the outstanding freshman on the team.

 April 1861. On April 19 the regular order of business was suspended "in consequence of the excitement occasioned by the late war news." Commencement arrangements were abandoned by the Society because of the troubled times. Other debate topics during the year concerned the expediency of abolishing slavery, the practicality of a draft, compromise with the rebels, the release of penitentiary prisoners to serve in the army, and whether slavery was more the cause of the war than the activities of abolitionists. Resolutions were passed honoring deceased brothers in the war, and mourning badges were worn.

At the reunion of June 1862, toasts were given to "Our Boys in the Army" and to "Our Country: May the Present Conflict consume her dross and refine her gold." When the President of Philomathean delivered a valedictory address in 1862, he queried, "Old Time, where are our Old Philomathean boys? His answer is, go ye to the tented field, and there you will find them." One had died, and others were suffering from wounds, disease, and fevers.

In a valedictory address in 1863 Philomatheans were asked by their President, "Are You Loyal?" If you were, he declared that you should be willing to lay down your lives for the government and enlist. The orator denied that the "Black Republicans" had caused the war or were fighting their "best friends" (Southerners) on behalf of the Negro. Loyal men did not make such accusations. "I also hold that no man can be a toy, traitor, or a Butternut (disloyal) and be a pious man . . ." he stated. "And I hold that a man who will vote for that God-forsaken Hell deserving man for Governor (Vallandlan) [Vallandigham] . . . is a great traitor and is doing as much to this Government as Jeff Davis or those men who are fighting under (him)." Never let it be said, he concluded that any Philomathean was disloyal. Resolutions were passed and published in the Religious Telescope rejecting for membership anyone who supported for Governor "the convicted traitor," Vallandigham. Orations at commencement included one upon "The Copperheads" and another upon "Our Boys in the Army," in which references to departed brothers sometimes brought forth an "unbidden tear."

At the Philomathean reunion in June 1865, orations were delivered upon "Abraham Lincoln," "Peace," and "Our Country's Triumph." An alumnus was asked to prepare a lecture upon members killed in battle for delivery at the next reunion. In the fall of 1865 arrangements were made for the purchase of a picture of Lincoln.

Commencement activities were only slightly affected by the war. The usual rounds of speakers, literary society meetings, and concerts took place, though frequent references were made to students and alumni in the army. In 1862 music was provided by the Eighteenth Regimental Band, and in 1865 music was furnished by a band from Camp Chase. The first number on a program of instrumental and vocal music in 1865 was "Victory at Last," and another number was "Lincoln's Funeral March." The ladies of the Philolethean Literary Society in 1865 organized a strawberry festival to help pay for fitting up their quarters, and graduates held their "First Annual Alumni Meeting."

During the war years Westerville remained a small country town, as it had been in 1861. A new Presbyterian Church had been erected in 1864. Compared to ten years earlier, a Commencement visitor in 1865 saw great improvement. The "frog ponds" were now gone, and tasteful residences ornamented with shrubs and flowers were everywhere along the shady streets. Drinking saloons and other dens of iniquity were not tolerated, and the village was a fine place for retired people.

Otterbein University had successfully survived the war and was now ready to proceed forward. In June 1865, the trustees authorized an attempt to gather funds to endow chairs of learning. A report to this governing body noted: "We have sustained considerable loss in assets by deaths, removals, and frequent calls for men to enter our country's service. The frequent calls for men and money have very much retarded the work of collecting. Now that the war is over, we may reasonably hope for a brighter day to dawn upon Otterbein University." The contributions and struggles of many were to be combined to make possible this advancement.
