New York Spring Theatre Tour

The Otterbein College Theatre is pleased to announce that arrangements have been completed for a five-day New York Theatre Tour during spring vacation. The tour will be open to all students, parents, faculty and friends of Otterbein.

The group will leave Westerville by motor coach on Sunday evening, April 7 and will return on Friday, April 12. The tour group will stay at the Hotel Piccadilly, 242 West 45th Street in the heart of the theatre district on Times Square.

Planned tour activities include admission to four Broadway plays or musicals (a fifth can be selected if desired), the Merv Griffin Show, tours of New York City, Lincoln Center, Rockefeller Center, United Nations and a museum (Museum of Modern Art, Guggenheim Museum or Metropolitan Museum). Other activities include a visit to the Empire State Building and a trip to Radio City Musical Hall. Additional free time can be spent in shopping or other leisure activities.

The overall cost for students, including bus fare, all scheduled activities in the city, tips, hotel bills (based on four to a room) is $87.50 (less $5.00 for previous tour participants). Cost for non-students, based on two-persons per room is $97.50. Tour members will be responsible for their own meals.

The tour will be limited to the first forty-four persons who pay a deposit of $30. All deposits will be non-refundable after Dec. 9. Final payment will be due six weeks before the tour. For payment of deposit or additional information, see Dr. Charles Dodrill, in the basement of Cowan Hall (phone 882-3601, Ext. 346).

Persons who would like to pay for their own transportation (to fly or go by rail) and meet the group in New York should contact Dr. Dodrill for details and arrangements.

Director's Corner

What is the role of the educational theatre in the small liberal arts college? This question, very frequently asked in educational and theatrical circles, is one that deserves our attention.

The nature of theatre has changed radically in the last decade, both for educational and professional theatre. The last fifteen years have brought about the demise of the "realistic" theatre which was born in the social renaissance of the last decades of the 19th century. Educational theatre did not really begin in this country until after the turn of the century; its major growth has been since 1945. Once looked at with scorn and disdain by "card-carrying" professional theatre artists, educational theatre has recently become the working framework for a theatrical renaissance. For decades educational theatre academicians have scorned professional theatre commercialism, while simultaneously preparing students for a career in professional theatre. In recent years this mutual mistrust and suspicion has begun to disappear as their interdependence has become clearer. Professional actors, directors, designers and technicians have discovered that educational theatres frequently have the most advanced equipment and theatres, while educational theatre practitioners have discovered that the professional is a very knowledgeable, practical and human person. Frequent dialogue and contact has been the result — educationally trained persons are more respected by professionals and the former frequently employ the latter. There are currently 36 professional repertory theatres around the country, many with educational development and support, such as the APA at the University of Michigan, the Tyrone Guthrie at Minnesota, and others at Princeton, Stanford, Washington, Kansas, etc. Panel discussions held at the recent American Educational Theatre Association Convention in New York City indicate that many other universities have such theatres in the planning stage.

What then is the role of the theatre at an institution like Otterbein? While it is not impossible to analyze fully this question, it is possible to make a few observations about the past and present, and perhaps dream a little about the future.

Liberal arts theatre has traditionally provided students with an opportunity to "dabble" in the arts, to expose young minds to dramatic literature in performance, and to provide entertainment to the campus community. This concept has changed in the past fifteen years. Liberal arts institutions have built fine theatres and have frequently employed top-notch educationally trained and professionally trained personnel. It is interesting to note that 53 Ohio colleges and universities currently offer course work and theatrical productions; 9 offer graduate work and 12 liberal arts institutions (including Otterbein) meet the minimum criteria for a theatre major established by the American Educational Theatre Association.

A brief comparison of some statistical evidence may clarify this growth. Existing records for 1957-58 indicate that three major productions at Otterbein played a total of five performances to approximately 2100 people. Total college enrollment was about 800. The theatre operating budget was a little over $2,000 and the Speech-Theatre department had about 20 majors. The annual report for 1966-67 shows that total attendance for four major productions (playing a total of fifteen performances) and a Children's Theatre production (playing three performances) was 11,407 persons. Total college enrollment was about 1450. The theatre operating budget for production expenses was approximately $11,000. The Speech-Theatre Department had about 75 majors. In addition, the Theatre has a Religious Drama Touring group and the first Summer Theatre program presented five plays for 24 performances in 1967.

Where then do we go from here? Should we establish closer ties with the professional theatre? Otterbein has employed a well-known professional guest star to work in student productions for the past six years. We are currently giving consideration to the possibility of employing several young professionals to live and work on this campus for 10 weeks. Does this mean that we are forsaking liberal arts? Of course not. We have always attempted to provide our students with the opportunity to experiment and develop in many directions, while simultaneously providing the finest in theatrical entertainment for the campus and community. We are not a professional school and do not wish totally to prepare students to go to New York. We can, however, provide them with sufficient background for teaching, entry into graduate school, or if they desire, the basis for a professional career. Perhaps we can do these things better with increased contact with professional theatre people. We know our guest star program is attractive – would young professionals be just as attractive?

The nature of the modern theatre has changed from a realistic theatre to an abstract, experimental, ever-changing form. A liberal arts theatre must do the old and the new; it must challenge as well as entertain; it must stimulate as well as educate; and above everything else, it must change, expand and adapt to the future or it will die.

We will probably try many of the above ideas – but, we will always try them only if they are consistent with the aims of a liberal arts theatre program designed to provide the best in cultural enrichment, training and audience involvement.
