and a bit breathtaking," Genzlinger wrote.

Between them, the two actors sing 16 songs. The only other performer onstage is the music director (Philip Dupont), who accompanies the actors on the piano as they sing the score.

"It's very modern musical theater, very action-oriented and operatic, with a lot of the dialogue put to music," said Evin Hoffman, who plays Loeb.

Framed in flashback from a 1958 parole hearing, the two-actor show focuses on the complex relationship between Leopold (Luke Stewart) and Loeb.

"At first, the relationship seems very black and white," said Hoffman, 24.

"But the more you delve into it, these are two humans who are trying to find out who they are. Although their actions are evil, they are just trying to discover their place in the world."
