

OTTERBEIN COLLEGE

FOUNDED 1847
WESTERVILLE, OHIO

Otterbein College Theater
Prof. Charles W. Dodrill, Director
Prof. Fred J. Thayer, Designer

- 35 sec. A man crouches in a darkened room...the door opens slowly...a shot rings out and a limp figure crumples to the floor... So goes the opening scene of "The Gazebo", a hit play by Alec Coppel, to be given by the Otterbein College Theater December 7-8-9-10. This murder mystery, in the form of a romantic comedy, provides an evening of laughs and entertainment for the audience who will be seated on the Cowan Hall stage to view the three-quarter round presentation. The ticket box office will open November 28th. Tickets may be obtained by calling TU 2-3611 between one and five o'clock weekdays. Curtain time is 8:15.
- 25 sec. 1 18th Century sunhouse and 1 mistaken murder, plus a prominent TV script writer and his loving wife add up to an evening of fun for audiences who will see the Otterbein College Theater presentation of Alec Coppel's "The Gazebo" December 7-8-9-10th. The show will be uniquely given in a three-quarters round arena style on the Cowan Hall stage in Westerville, Ohio. Tickets go on sale November 28 and may be obtained by calling TU 2-3611 between one and five o'clock weekdays. Curtain time is 8:15.
- 30 sec. "Awright, where ja hide da body?" asks Louie of Elliott Nash, the prominent TV writer, in the Otterbein College Theater production of "The Gazebo" to be given on the Cowan Hall stage in Westerville, Dec. 7-8-9-10. The show will be given three-quarters arena style with the audience seated on three sides of the stage area. Alec Coppel's romantic mystery comedy provides an evening of laughs and entertainment for all as the search for the body of the mistaken murder victim unfolds. Where DID Elliott Nash hide the body? Come and find out. Curtain time--8:15. For ticket reservations phone TU 2-3611.