The Campaign for Otterbein’s Future: Investing in Students First
This is a historic moment for Otterbein University. In this issue, you'll read about the most ambitious comprehensive campaign in the University's history. We will secure a total of $50 million in support of Otterbein and all that this University stands for in the higher education community.

This campaign is about more than any dollar amount. It's about the total value of Otterbein — our principles and what we stand for.

It's about a curriculum that is nationally recognized as a model by education experts for the smart way it blends the liberal arts with professional studies, while intentionally integrating direct experience into all learning.

It's about keeping excellence and opportunity affordable for all families whose students stand to benefit from Otterbein's transformational education, which is why we've committed to yet another tuition freeze coming in the 2015-2016 academic year. It's about our commitment to serve and advance a greater good.

Where Otterbein stands matters. And now is the time to make that clear. This is a critical moment in higher education. Many schools are trying to ensure their continued existence and relevance in a rapidly changing marketplace and economy. From where I stand, the world needs Otterbein and its graduates now more than ever. That's why this campaign matters and that's why we're investing in our students first.

This campaign will help ensure that Otterbein will stand strong among other great institutions in our country for generations to come. It will ensure Otterbein graduates are prepared to stand out as leaders and learners.

The campaign's goals, which are designed to support the priorities of our strategic plan, will build the foundation for Otterbein's future. The impact of the campaign will extend well beyond the boundaries of our time. You can read more about the funding priorities — Campus Renewal, Building a Model Community and Access and Affordability — starting on page 10.

I am proud to report that we are entering the public phase of this campaign ahead of schedule with $17 million already secured. Momentum is driving us forward because leaders, alumni and supporters are making the decision to stand with Otterbein.

Part of that excitement stems from our campaign leaders. Otterbein alumnus and current University Trustee Kent Stuckey '79 and his wife, Laura, are excited to lead what they call a “vitaly important” effort for Otterbein as the campaign chairs. As a team, they have successfully led numerous philanthropic endeavors in central Ohio. The Stuckey family legacy also represents four generations of Otterbein graduates and Kent is well-versed in the values that Otterbein holds most dear. His father, Dr. Paul Stuckey H'83, served as the pastor for Westerville's Church of the Master.

Steve and Patti Steinour are serving as the chairs of the Parent-Community Campaign Committee and are proud parents of an Otterbein student. Steve is the chairman, president and chief executive officer of Huntington Bancshares Incorporated. Patti is heavily involved as a community leader serving organizations that include the Columbus College of Art and Design, the New Albany Community Foundation and the United Way Women's Leadership Council.

The Faculty-Staff Campaign Committee is being chaired by Dr. Michael Hoggarth, department chairman for biology and earth science and an Otterbein professor and loyal donor for 21 years.

These leaders are Otterbein champions. I'm counting on them. And I'm counting on you. Throughout the next five years, I hope you'll also make a similar decision to stand with Otterbein in ways that you can, too, because...

Where We STAND Matters.

Sincerely,

Kathy A. Krendl

About the Cover
This issue’s cover features the new campaign logo, “Where We STAND Matters.” The Otterbein circle is intended not only to be reminiscent of the brick that shapes much of our picturesque campus, but it also speaks to the University’s commitment to diversity with representation from unique affiliations, as well as diverse roles, academic interests and backgrounds in the Otterbein community. The Otterbein circle illustrates open pathways that lead in and out just as educational opportunity draws students into Otterbein and then leads each back out into the world prepared to lead a life of purpose. Most importantly, the Otterbein circle represents our commitment to stand together as one to ensure that Otterbein stands strong into the future as one of the great institutions of our country.

Otterbein University is committed to providing a workplace that is free from discrimination. Otterbein does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, gender, national origin, religion, gender identity, sexual orientation, age, disability, genetic information, military status, or veteran status in admissions, in access to, or in treatment within its educational programs or activities, in employment, recruiting, or policy administration.

Zeroing in on the Guys with the Doughnuts
On page 40 of the latest Otterbein Towers magazine, you featured a photo of four guys you were asking the readers to identify. I can tell you that the second young man from the right is Scott Lacy ’93, who was my student assistant in International Student Programs and became a good friend of mine. The other guys look familiar, but I can’t come up with their names. The house in the background is probably 123 Center St., which was torn down some time ago. At one time it served as the international house, but not at the time of this photo. Hope that helps!
Chuck Vedder H’07

The flag is the flag of ATO National Fraternity and the house was Scott Lacy’s residence right across from the stadium.
Ed Heller ’95

Melissa DeVore Bruney ’93 also wrote and said she believed the student to the far right was Greg Brubaker ’93 and that she recognized them all but couldn’t remember their names. She said they are all of the class of 1993. Allen Prindle, professor of business, accounting and economics, also confirmed Scott Lacy’s identity. Thanks to all for their efforts!

Kudos for the Last Issue
Congratulations on the great job of the most recent issue of Towers. The research and how the University is working on obtaining job experience for recent graduates was outstanding.
Keep up the good work!

Marching in to the future! From the new turf and track to the new campaign fanfare performed by the Otterbein Marching Band, the Homecoming pre-game announcement was spectacular in every sense. (The 20-0 victory over Marietta was pretty great, too!) Learn more about the historic $50 million “Where We Stand Matters” campaign and watch the unveiling online at www.otterbein.edu/stand.
Family and friends of Kyle Miller, an Otterbein student who died in a tragic kayaking accident in March, were touched when more than 400 runners participated in the Kyle Miller Memorial 5K Run/Walk on Aug. 24 in Hilliard, Ohio. The event raised $44,225 to purchase hurdles for the new track and to endow a scholarship prize for junior or senior zoo and conservation science majors to fulfill their experiential learning requirements and who share Miller’s passion for wildlife.

Miller was a zoo and conservation science major at Otterbein, a volunteer at the Ohio Wildlife Center and a gifted high school and college track and field athlete. In his application for Otterbein’s zoo and conservation science program, he wrote, “I grew to love the environment and everything that dwells in it. From the smallest critters in the ground to the highest birds in the sky, I’ve wanted to learn more and more about them and hopefully protect them from the dangers that interact with most species … I am truly passionate about the environment. I love the outdoors and love the rain as much as the sun.”

The event was a tribute to Miller’s life and legacy. The Ohio Wildlife Center brought animals to educate the public about wildlife conservation and named an internship in his honor. Michael Feldman Brings His Show to the Otterbein Stage

Michael Feldman’s Whad’Ya Know®, a nationally syndicated, comedy/quiz/interview radio show, brought more than 1,000 people to campus for a live broadcast from the Fritsche Theatre at Cowan Hall on Aug. 2.

Host Michael Feldman entertained the audience with his own brand of humor, interviews with local celebrities and experts, and the popular quiz segment featuring contestants in the audience and on the phone, who have the chance to be on national radio and win one of several fabulous prize packages donated by local businesses. The guests at the Otterbein show included Lydia Loveless, alternative country singer/songwriter; Elizabeth Lessner, restaurateur and social activist; and Coyote Peterson, adventurer, animal enthusiast and creator of The Reptile Show, Swamp Monsters and Breaking Trail. Whad’Ya Know® is produced by Wisconsin Public Radio and distributed by Public Radio International.

If you weren’t in the audience of the sold-out show, you can listen to it online at www.notmuch.com/wyk/august-2-2014-otterbein-university-columbus-oh. See photos from the event at www.otterbein.edu/whadyaknowphotos.

For me it’s just Ohio State but The Otterbein — what a great audience at the Fritsche, and so educated I had to talk up. Sorry about the violation of long established campus codes but Betsy Lessner makes a heck of a zombie. Thank you for our great reception — The Otterbein is close to, if not at the top of, places we’ve taken Whad’ya Know!

Best, Michael Feldman

Introducing the Class of 2018

This year, Otterbein welcomed 562 members of the class of 2018 to campus. The class has a high academic profile with an average grade point average of 3.5 and average class rank in the 73rd percentile. The average ACT score is 24. The incoming class is more diverse than in recent years, with students of color making up 16 percent of incoming students. Men comprise 42 percent of the class of 2018, and women 58 percent. Fourteen percent came from outside Ohio. They represent 22 states and three countries. Popular major areas of study are business, biology, nursing and health and sport sciences, but aligning with the national trend, the most popular major with this class is “undeclared.”

Student Organizations Win National Awards

WOBN

WOBN, Otterbein’s student-run radio station, recently won two national awards from College Broadcasters, Inc. (CBI). Josh Overholser ’14 and Jon Bozeka ’16 won an award for their play-by-play announcing of an Otterbein vs. Muskingum basketball game. Overholser, Kyle Ripma ’14, Chris Akins ’14, Caleb Hastings ’14 and Nick Rhodes ’14 won an award for a public service announcement they created for their Senior Year Experience class, Media for Social Change. The awards were presented at the annual CBI conference in Seattle in October.

Mortar Board

The Otterbein Teliotes chapter of Mortar Board, a national senior honorary society, won the Silver Torch Award from the national organization. This award is granted to chapters executing timeliness and dedication while exemplifying the ideals of scholarship, leadership and service. Mortar Board recognizes college seniors for their exemplary scholarship, leadership and service. To be considered, students must have a 3.0 GPA or be in the top 35 percent of their class.
More than 70 society members were honored at Otterbein’s annual recognition dinner this year, which was held on campus on Friday, Sept. 19, as part of Homecoming Weekend.

This year’s event, to honor Otterbein’s most loyal donors, was steeped in history. It was held on the lawn of Howard House, to honor its 100th year and new role as home to the Office of Alumni Relations (see story on pg. 33). Howard House was named for President J. Gordon Howard (1945-1957), who initiated the first official giving program at Otterbein.

Important figures in Otterbein’s history were in attendance, including Presidents Emeriti Brent DeVore and Tom Kerr, as well as current and past members of the board of trustees. And a historic announcement was made about Otterbein’s future before it was made public the next day—the launch of the $50 million “Where We Stand Matters” comprehensive campaign.

New members were inducted into the Joanne Van Sant Leadership Giving Society and the 1847 Society, two groups with historic names that are already supporting the University’s future. The new tradition was a ceremonious start to Homecoming Weekend. See photos and a video of the event at www.otterbein.edu/jvs.

More than 4,800 donors made 2013-2014 the most successful year for the Annual Fund yet. Alumni, parents, faculty, staff, students and friends donated a record-setting $921,637 during the 2013-2014 Annual Fund drive. The Annual Fund staff is already working hard to surpass this goal in 2014-2015. Every gift made to the Annual Fund counts toward the “Where We Stand Matters” campaign.
The campaign for Otterbein’s future affirms that where Otterbein stands, and what it stands for in the higher education community, matters.

The campaign for Otterbein’s future was officially announced at Homecoming on Sept. 20, 2014, as hundreds of alumni, students, faculty, staff and community members stood with Otterbein to cheer as the University embarked on the largest campaign in history — $50 million.

We know that Otterbein’s founders stood for bold ideals — believing women should teach and learn alongside their male counterparts. We know that Otterbein’s leaders stood for shared governance and establishing an inclusive community — leading by example and reminding others that all members of our community should have a voice. That Otterbein faculty stood as true educational innovators setting the pace for others to follow — first, in 1969 when Integrative Studies was adopted as our core curriculum, and reaffirmed just three years ago when the University developed a 21st century curriculum. And long before the value of service learning was embraced by other institutions, we know that Otterbein graduates stood strong as faithful, committed servant leaders.

Curiosity, civility, critical thinking and compassion serve as the ground we stand upon to embolden Otterbein’s unwavering commitment to advance a greater good.

And that is why…Where We STAND Matters. We will invest in our students first to ensure they are standing on firm ground for their futures.
$50 Million Goal: Three Funding Priorities

Campus Renewal: $15 Million
Advancing Otterbein’s learning experience by enhancing facilities and green spaces

Building a Model Community: $18 Million
Building a strong foundation of resources to foster innovation, creativity and learning

Access and Affordability: $17 Million
Ensuring Otterbein’s excellence is an opportunity families can afford
Otterbein’s campus is essential to our mission. It serves as the home to our students’ learning experiences. Otterbein’s facilities and green spaces are, in fact, among the university’s greatest assets.

Whether it’s a laboratory in the Science Building where students and faculty explore the fundamental questions of nature, or the Fritsche Theatre stage, where acting careers are launched, or the trees that shade historic Towers Hall and lure our future students — our campus connects faculty, students, staff, alumni and visitors.

Support of Campus Renewal priorities will provide resources to protect and enhance the learning and living experience that so many students find transformative to their growth and discovery. This campaign priority also supports the master plan while creating a standing fund to maintain and enhance facilities in the future. Improvements have already been made with the resurfacing at Memorial Stadium and funds are now being raised to improve the Campus Center.

Campus Renewal will guarantee that Otterbein will long stand as a well-cared for and well-equipped place of learning and discovery. Our campus will be further distinguished for an environment that fosters the greatness we expect our students to achieve.
Dave Lehman’s ’70 connection to Otterbein runs deep, going back to his boyhood when he would peek through the fence at Memorial Stadium to watch the powerhouse Cardinal football teams in the late 1950s and early 1960s.

He went on to make his own mark in Otterbein athletics, first as a member of the cross country and track teams and later as a highly successful coach in those sports at the University for more than 40 years. He retired from coaching earlier this year, but not before he and his wife, Claudia Lehman H’97, made a generous $50,000 contribution to the $2.1 million project to install a new track and synthetic turf playing surface at Memorial Stadium.

The gift was another example of Dave’s love and loyalty to his alma mater. How else do you describe a man who convinced his wife to buy a house on West Street in 1972 based on it being in the shadow of Memorial Stadium? The Lehmans still live there after four decades of hosting pasta dinners for Dave’s athletes and providing them with a home away from home.

“It’s a loyalty thing for me. I never was one to think the grass was greener on the other side of the fence,” says Dave, who has lived his entire life in Westerville and helped run his family’s business, Culver Art & Frame Co., until he retired from the company in 2009. “I think we’ve got a pretty good product at Otterbein. It’s worth supporting.

“Otterbein offers the opportunity to have a great four-year experience not just from a classroom standpoint but a life-education standpoint,” he says. “We want to make sure future generations of students have the same great experiences as past generations have had at Otterbein.”

To build a model community, we must ensure a strong and stable link to resources. Such resources equip faculty to teach and inspire discovery as much as they help fund life-changing experiences for students.

Fellowships, research, faculty development, classroom and laboratory enhancements and creative campus initiatives are critical to the work we do at Otterbein.

If our faculty is responsible for challenging and inspiring students to realize their personal best, then we have a responsibility to provide them with the means, the tools and the support to help make that possible.

Supporting the best ways to help our students learn. What if all that stands in the way of a student’s ability to make real contributions to his or her discipline is the chance to travel for research or an internship or some form of cultural immersion and engagement?

Securing funds that enhance the faculty and student experience. Immersive, hands-on learning experiences complement traditional methods of learning. Students need the opportunity to apply lessons in the real world, so they can own their knowledge. Faculty members deserve the same kind of opportunities, so they can enhance and advance their teaching through lessons learned in the field.

By investing in building a model community, we will ensure Otterbein graduates are prepared to stand out as leaders and learners — proven professionals of great moral intelligence.
“WE THINK OF OTTERBEIN AS A COMMUNITY OF VALUES. THERE’S AN EMPHASIS ON EDUCATION AND ON COMMUNITY — ON GETTING INVOLVED AND MAKING AN IMPACT.”

- STEVE AND PATTI STEINOUR, PARENT-COMMUNITY CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE CHAIRS

Supporting Our Scholars

Mark Thresher ’78 and Debbie Scott Thresher ’77 will tell you the best things in their lives can be traced to an Otterbein football game in the fall of 1975.

That was when Mark, a sophomore, says he first spotted Debbie Scott, a junior, in the crowd at Memorial Stadium. He decided he had to meet her and came up with a strategy to get his foot in the door at Debbie’s sorority house. It worked — and he wasn’t even put off by the fact she had curlers in her hair the evening they were introduced.

“That was quite a first impression,” Debbie says, “but he stuck around.”

The two started dating and Debbie, a music education major, selected Mark, an accounting major, as her escort when she was elected Homecoming Queen in 1976. They married four months after Mark’s graduation.

From there, the Threshers began building a life that has seen Mark advance to top leadership posts at Nationwide Insurance — he’s now chief financial officer — and serve as chairman of Otterbein’s board of trustees. Debbie has been a music educator, first as a teacher for 10 years in public schools and at Powell United Methodist Church the past 19 years. As parents, they raised daughters Chelsea ’05, now an eighth-grade English teacher in suburban Columbus, and Kaylea, who holds a doctor of pharmacy degree from Ohio Northern University.

The Threshers have never forgotten how their experiences at Otterbein helped prepare them for life. So it became obvious to the couple that supporting the university’s $50 million “Where We Stand Matters” campaign was a critically important thing to do. As a result, the Threshers are making gifts totaling $500,000 to establish a scholarship fund for music education majors and a fellowship that will support experiential learning at Otterbein.

“This is something we needed to do as a couple and give back to what nurtured us so well,” Debbie says. “Otterbein is obviously where it all started for the two of us.” Adds Mark, “Deb and I wouldn’t be here doing what we do today without Otterbein. The best thing about an Otterbein education is it prepares you for life, not just a career. You learn how to be a person who can communicate and solve problems.”

For the full profile, visit www.otterbein.edu/stand.
Otterbein stands for opportunity, and has since its first days. All students — regardless of their financial circumstances — should be able to access and afford an Otterbein education. This value harkens back to 1847.

Otterbein stands for inclusiveness. Otterbein values talented, promising students who are eager to learn, to lead and to better themselves so they can better their world. All who seek educational opportunity are welcome at Otterbein.

Otterbein stands for learning. We believe in rewarding hard work and offering support to make sure more students have the opportunity to benefit from our experience. Those who stand to gain the most from Otterbein deserve the opportunity to call themselves Cardinals.

Raising funds for scholarships ensures Otterbein will continue to recruit and graduate first-generation college students. The university will be better equipped to recruit and compete for students whose academic credentials and personal potential stand to grow exponentially because of the learning environment they will find at Otterbein.

Many of our alumni stand where they do because Otterbein stood by them — giving each a chance to do and be more.

Investing in Access and Affordability will ensure the same opportunity will be afforded to the next generation of Cardinals.
Changing Lives is Our Shared Story

It didn’t take long for Miguel Martinez-Saenz to decide that Otterbein is a place where he could work shoulder-to-shoulder with faculty members passionate about lighting the fire of learning in students.

“When I left my interview and visit, I knew I wanted an offer,” recalls Martinez-Saenz. He got his wish in January when Otterbein hired him to become the University’s provost and vice president for academic affairs. The post as Otterbein’s chief academic officer is the next step in a fast-rising career that included a 10-year stay at Wittenberg University in Springfield, Ohio, where he was a philosophy professor and administrator, and for the past three years as dean of the University College and associate provost for student success at St. Cloud State University in Minnesota.

His early experiences here have confirmed some of his initial impressions of the university. One is that President Kathy Krendl has built a strong team of college deans and top administrators. Another is that Otterbein has faculty members with “unbelievable talent and commitment to student learning.”

One of the main points he makes is that many students become passive learners as they move through the U.S. education system. “Students can identify key points in their lives when learning is no longer fun,” says Martinez-Saenz. “That little fire for learning has been extinguished. That’s the task before us — how do we create the conditions for students to light up again, find their passion and see purpose in actually learning more?”

“The Integrative Studies Program is at the heart of our commitment to liberal arts education and ensuring students are prepared to work and live in a context that is changing quite rapidly,” says Martinez-Saenz. “The Five Cards [Five Cardinal Experiences], similarly, demonstrate an attentiveness to the importance of bringing to life the things that matter and the things that are integral to classroom instruction.”

He also says Otterbein’s intentional blending of the liberal arts with professional studies is a necessity in today’s world and sets the University apart in important ways.

The Otterbein board of trustees recently approved holding undergraduate tuition steady for the 2015-2016 academic year.
Seated at the work table in her office at Roush Hall, President Kathy Krendl tapped a thick file folder that’s chock-full of ideas on how the University can forge new partnerships with companies and key organizations in central Ohio. “This file will get bigger,” she said. “To be a valued educational resource in this region, we must constantly evaluate what the needs are, how they align with our mission and how they will make us of even more value to the community.”

There are myriad examples of Otterbein doing exactly that, including the recent establishment of programs to address expected shortages of systems engineers and primary-care physicians in Ohio. It’s essential in helping ensure that Otterbein excels at preparing students for good-paying jobs in rewarding careers.

Krendl and Otterbein board of trustees Chairman Mark Thresher ’78 emphasized the University’s interest in building such partnerships when they spoke at an Oct. 24 event at Nationwide Insurance headquarters in downtown Columbus. The event introduced Otterbein’s $50 million “Where We Stand Matters” campaign to Columbus’ corporate community as well as foundations, government officials and other key stakeholder groups.

The event also provided an apt setting for the University to present the Mary B. Thomas Award to retired corporate executive John King ’68 and his wife, Susie. The award, named in memory of Otterbein benefactor and trustee Mary Burnham Thomas ’28, is the University’s highest honor for philanthropy.

The Kings have given generously to Otterbein through the years, including leadership gifts for the renovation and expansion of the Science Center, construction of the Clements Recreation Center and establishment of the Campus Wireless Project. In addition, John King, who rose to the executive level at Electronic Data Systems and was a co-founder of Perot Systems, served as an Otterbein trustee for 18 years, including as chairman of the Advancement Committee, before retiring from the board in 2013.

In her remarks at the Nationwide event, Krendl said she believes the values and missions of the companies and organizations in attendance have much in common with Otterbein’s vision and purpose. “You’ll discover Otterbein people stand out as leaders and critical thinkers who know how to immediately integrate into your teams,” she said.

Thresher cited several examples, starting with the University’s new systems engineering major that is scheduled to launch in fall 2015.

Designed in response to Ohio’s need to fill an estimated 34,000 engineering jobs by 2018, the goal of the new major will combine the principles of mechanical, industrial and electrical engineering with the university’s nationally recognized Integrative Studies program for the teaching of the liberal arts. According to program Director Gary Maul, the vision is to provide students with the interdisciplinary, technical and team skills needed to define and solve multifaceted engineering problems.

“We’ve created an approach to learning,” Maul said, “that will produce well-rounded graduates with a strong grasp of engineering fundamentals accompanied by a broad understanding of the complex nature of those problems.”

Thresher also pointed to Otterbein’s effort to do something about a national shortage of more than 45,000 primary-care physicians within the next decade through a new partnership with the Ohio University Heritage’s College of Osteopathic Medicine. This Early Assurance Program (EAP) is aimed at increasing the pipeline of primary-care doctors in Ohio.

Thresher also announced a new partnership between Otterbein and Nationwide to offer high-end programming courses for computer coders through a training “boot camp” in industry parlance. The non-credit courses, which will begin in 2015, will be marketed to working adults in the technology field.

Corporate partnerships also extend into Otterbein classrooms. Last summer, retired Honda International Vice President Toshikata Amino served as co-instructor with Professor of Management and Human Resources Don Eskew on an MBA course that examined international business strategy from the perspective of Honda executives and the automaker’s suppliers. Amino took the idea for the course to Eskew at the suggestion of President Krendl, who met Amino during a visit to Japan in 2012.

Whether it’s interns or graduates, Krendl said the educational landscape is distinctive. “It’s because Otterbein graduates not only believe they have a responsibility to advance their professions and the industries they serve,” she said, “but that their values and Otterbein education challenge them to advance a greater good in doing so.”
Sharing the Story

There have been many events in the last few months to announce the “Where We Stand Matters” campaign for Otterbein’s Future. Here are photos from a few of them.

Attendees of the Oct. 24 event at Nationwide Insurance listen to details of the campaign from President Krendl and Board Chairman Mark Thresher ’78.

As President Krendl prepares the Otterbein community for the largest comprehensive campaign in this University’s history — there was only one place to go for understanding why a school like Otterbein matters. To advance Otterbein’s future — you value and look to your past.

On September 30, three Otterbein presidents gathered in front of the fireplace in the residence that Frank and Vida S. Clements once called home, before it served as the president’s residence. All three of these leaders have or do call the West Street residence home. When they met, they shared memories of the families raised, the guests hosted and the events housed within the walls.

They also shared stories of traditions, Otterbein values and their hopes for the future. Each leader represents an era of Otterbein history. President Emeritus Thomas Kerr was a builder of ideas — his leadership reflected an expansion of Otterbein’s knowledge infrastructure with the development of the University’s nationally acclaimed Integrative Studies curriculum and shared governance model. President Emeritus C. Brent DeVore was a builder of place — his leadership reflected expansion on nearly every front of campus, from academic buildings to residence halls in a heightened call to service. Mindful of her role to ensure Otterbein stands strong into the future, President Krendl asked these two former presidents to share their insight as her legacy focuses on building Otterbein’s 21st century model community.

As leaders, their legacies are their own. But the view from where they stand has been shared. And from their personal perspectives there is complete agreement on one subject: what Otterbein stands for and its commitment to put students first truly matters.

ON STUDENTS FIRST
Krendl: What do you think of the campaign’s call to invest in students first?

DeVore: That’s what we’re all about. We’ve always said that we’re a college of opportunity for all students regardless of their socio-economic backgrounds. That’s been true of Otterbein since 1847. We really need to invest in our students because we are truly a very unique institution complementing the other large state institutions.

Kerr: The only reason for the university existing is the fact that it’s about the students. The sense of the total community and its educational impact, both the curricular and the co-curricular programs, create a unique and really outstanding environment.

ON MODEL COMMUNITY
Krendl: What do you see as the core values that drive Otterbein’s model community?

Kerr: The diversity of the University has been a real strength in its values. The openness and acceptance going back to the acceptance of the Japanese internees in World War II, when that was not popular, or women in the first classes and in the early faculty, when that was not a popular concept in the country. Otterbein has always been a leader in service and a leader in its use of diversity as an educational experience for students.
DeVore: I always felt that if you have the opportunity to go to Otterbein, you have the responsibility to do something in your life to give back. Another thing that underscores the institution is the sense that it’s caring, it’s unpretentious — it does not like arrogance at all. We want people to be open to ideas and to the involvement with others and the faculty and staff. It amazes me the way they [faculty and staff] would be involved with students in helping them be successful.

ON CAMPUS RENEWAL

Krendl: As you think about Campus Renewal, what spaces should we respect and protect as part of the legacy and the message that you get when you arrive on the Otterbein campus?

Kerr: The greatest building program in Otterbein’s history was in the 1960s with the growth that occurred. Certainly, there have been a lot of new buildings and changes since then — some in my presidency and many more in Brent’s. It’s a challenge to keep up with facilities. I’m amazed by the new track and turf that allows a much different use of the field with newer technologies. The same is true of the Campus Center, which was opened as a new facility when I was a faculty member. That was a long time ago. Technology has changed a lot of things including how students interact. Everything is different than it was in earlier periods — for socialization, for learning, for communications. The Campus Center needs to reflect those changes.

DeVore: Something different has been happening with facilities on all campuses. A library used to be a place where all you knew then was, “Shh! Be quiet!” Now, we’ve added food courts to be inviting for a place not only to study, but to converse.

The same is true with the Campus Center. It used to be a place that you went to and ate your meals. But [it] needs to be more open and inclusive to bring students to another gathering place to meet outside the classroom, whether it be with fellow students or faculty members.

DeVore: I stand with Otterbein because of our proud history of helping all students with potential succeed.

Kerr: I stand with Otterbein because it’s a university of opportunity. It has provided countless opportunities for students. And [the] strength of the sense of community is so exceptional that it distinguishes Otterbein from many other schools.

Krendl: One of the goals of the campaign is to make an Otterbein education more affordable and more accessible. What is the most important thing that makes an Otterbein education unique that would encourage people to invest in Otterbein?

Kerr: I think it’s the integration in the whole community — the educational experience; the strong component of service along with programs like Integrative Studies, which preserve the liberal arts; and the traditions that make the Otterbein community a unique experience. Certainly other schools have elements of these … but the way that Otterbein has them working together makes it a unique experience of high value.

DeVore: We are a quality alternative to a large public institution. Now having said that, I have three degrees from state institutions in Ohio. But this is different. Not every student is meant to go to a mega-university or a large place. In the admissions process, we should not admit a student for whom we cannot provide the support system. Part of our mission is to help students be successful. We’ve been doing this with high quality since 1847.

Douglas Bean

Douglas Bean has worked hard to support his family of eight and send three children to Otterbein. For being an exceptional role model as an Otterbein parent, Bean was awarded the inaugural Model Community Family Award at Family Weekend on Nov. 1.

This newly-established award is given in honor of the outstanding and significant contributions family members make in the lives of Otterbein students by preparing them for college and supporting them while they are attending Otterbein.

Bean was nominated by his daughter, Emmanuela Bean ’16, an English major, because of the work ethic he demonstrated during a difficult time for their family. In her essay, Emmanuela wrote, “Nothing I experience will ever be as difficult as what he’s been through, and it is my driving force in studying at Otterbein.”

Douglas was laid off from the Columbus Dispatch five years ago and worked several part-time jobs to support the family and help two of his sons, Nathaniel Bean ’10 and Lucas Bean ’13, attend Otterbein. Douglas currently works two full-time jobs and does additional freelance writing, while still finding time to spend with his family.

“I knew immediately I had to write about my dad, as he has been the inspiration of my experience at Otterbein,” Emmanuela said. “Whenever I’m struggling with a class or a homework assignment, I think about how hard my dad has to work every day just to make ends meet … and that makes me want to work even harder, as he has sacrificed so much for me to go to college.”

Elizabeth Saltzgiver ’99

Director of Audience Services Stands with Otterbein

When Elizabeth Saltzgiver ’99 was faced with an illness that challenged her ability to continue her studies at Otterbein, she discovered that Otterbein stood ready to face this challenge with her.

“I’ll never forget how nervous I was as I prepared for my sophomore conference to discuss my future in the music program,” remembered Saltzgiver. “I thought I needed to be ready to defend myself. Instead, every faculty member in that room cared about my health and each wanted to know what they could do to help me work through this challenge.”

As a 20-year-old, Saltzgiver said that kind of genuine care and investment was monumental, and was her first understanding of what Otterbein really stood for.

Now, as the director of audience services in Otterbein’s Department of Theatre and Dance, Saltzgiver offers the same support that Otterbein showed her to students and patrons alike.

“I am a part of a very talented team of individuals that coach, nurture and lead our students, who come from all over the country and have many stories to tell in the artistic and business professions of the theatre industry,” she said. “And when those students graduate, we celebrate their successes together knowing that each of us played a role in getting them to their next chapters and knowing that Otterbein is now a part of their stories.”

Since 2000, Saltzgiver has been supporting theatre patrons and keeping them involved in the Otterbein experience.

“My title has never limited me from sharing my opinion or an insight,” she said. “If I have an idea, I know I can share it. It might not come to fruition, but I know my input and suggestions are always welcome.”

Outside of Otterbein, Saltzgiver is currently a member of the board of trustees for the Westerville Visitors and Convention Bureau. She also completed the highly competitive Next Generation of Leaders in the Arts Fellowship Program in 2012, served as the chairwoman for the Westerville Rhythm and Arts event and the Otterbein liaison for the Westerville Parks & Recreation Community Theatre production of The Wizard of Oz in 2013, and was a past board member of the Westerville SERTOMA Club.

He found Otterbein to be exactly what he needed as a young college student—a place where he said “you get into your bubble and come out with a different perspective.”

“I learned life is about resiliency,” he said. “My experiences and education at Otterbein also helped me to be better able to navigate professionally. It was not just my courses but also the broader experiences I had as a student. Otterbein challenged me to think, to search and to be honest with myself.”

Brown now works as an information risk analyst at JPMorgan Chase, where he examines data in search of potential risks to the company’s information technology systems.

A self-described “corporate guy,” Brown said it blows people’s minds when they learn that the data analytics expert majored in sociology at Otterbein. But it makes sense to him. “In data analytics, you’re curious and searching for trends the same way you do in sociology.”

“I wake up every day and love what I do,” he said, adding he never forgets the role Otterbein has played in his success. In fact, he believes so much in the Otterbein experience that he has been a monthly donor to the University since he was an undergraduate student.

“I believe in supporting Otterbein because it goes back to investing in the areas of your life that are important to you,” he said. “Otterbein built me up to be the type of person I am in the larger community and to be a good father. It’s always about working to be a better person and making a difference in people’s lives. Otterbein has a special place in my heart.”

Brown recently served a three-year term on the Alumni Council and talks with students about launching careers. Such acts of service are a habit he developed as an undergraduate when he wore many hats, including chairman of the College Judicial Council, student member of the Otterbein board of trustees, national officer on the board of directors of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, and member of the search committee that recommended the hiring of Otterbein President Kathy Krendl.

Outside the office, Brown has a rich family life. He and his partner, Terrell Stephens, have four sons, Adan, Amir, Dylan and Damian, whom they treasure.

In August 1958, my parents and I moved into 131 W. Park St. My father was starting his tenure as president of Otterbein College, and I was an obnoxious 12-year-old starting seventh grade far away from my friends.

With three stories and a basement, the house we moved into seemed huge! The first floor consisted of a formal dining room, kitchen and parlor. Although it was used mainly for college social events, the parlor was also our music room, where my mother played piano, my father played violin and I played cello. A screened-in front porch looked out on Cowan Hall. From there, we could hear the carillon from Towers Hall.

Three bedrooms comprised much of the second floor. A number of guests stayed with us during my father’s tenure, including Congressman Walter Judd, historian Bruce Catton and singer Marian Anderson. A secret compartment under the hardwood floor upstairs was just big enough to hide a bottle of liquor. My father thought that was strange in a house where the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League had lived.

The third floor was a big open area which contained a double bed for family when they visited and my desk. I spent a lot of time up there during high school years. There were also several cedar lined closets which smelled wonderful.

The basement included a room where one or two male college students could stay. They received reduced housing rates in return for working around the house and yard. My freshman roommate, Ward Hines ’68, and I stayed there our sophomore year. Our neighbors included Dr. Lyle Michael and his wife, Gladys. One of my first paying jobs was mowing his lawn. He and Dr. Tom Kerr were instrumental in my decision to go to graduate school.

My father retired in May 1971. I visited in July 2014, and interrupted a staff meeting taking place on the front porch. Heidi Tracy, vice president of Institutional Advancement, very graciously spent the next several hours showing me around Howard House and campus. The house is arranged differently now, but it certainly stirred many fond memories.

A 100th Birthday for Howard House

In an historical district called Temperance Row, Howard House (131 W. Park St.) was built 100 years ago by Purley Baker, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America. After several years of private ownership, the house was purchased by Otterbein to be used as a presidential residence. In 1947, President J. Gordon Howard (1945-1957) moved into the house that would later be named for him. President Lynn Turner (1958-1971) was the last president to live there. Currently, Howard House is home to Alumni Relations and Advancement Services. We asked President Turner’s son, Bruce, if he would share some memories of the old house.

When her mom died in 2009, Miriam decided that planned giving was the best way to honor her mother's life and her love for Otterbein. She is making an annual gift to fund the Rachel Walter Fetzer '48 Scholarship.

In addition, Miriam has designated the proceeds of a life insurance policy to fund the Rachel Walter Fetzer '48 and Miriam Fetzer Angerer '84 Scholarship upon her passing.

Income from the funds will be used to provide a scholarship for a student who is an education or business major with preference given to band members.

“My mother was very thankful for the education she received and totally enjoyed all the friendships she made here,” Miriam says. “She loved Otterbein, and this gift is a way for me to honor that.”

Fellow Alumni,

As your alumni director, it is indeed a privilege to engage with countless alumni who generously support the University through their time, talent and treasures. Each individual contribution, when combined together, strengthens the Otterbein experience. Together we propel Otterbein forward to be a nationally recognized model community of educators, leaders and learners.

My sincere gratitude is extended to hundreds of alumni volunteer Cardinals and to those alumni who collectively serve on the Alumni Networks and Alumni Council. It is their commitment to create meaningful ways for you to engage with students, faculty and with each other.

I want you to be part of the Otterbein synergy of alumni engagement. Otterbein pride is demonstrated through maintaining a meaningful, lifelong relationship with your alma mater. Congratulations to the 2014 Young Alumni Award Winners

The annual Young Alumni Awards Ceremony was held Sept. 19 in Roush Hall and honored seven outstanding young alumni for their notable personal and professional achievements. The Young Alumni Awards recognize alumni age 40 and younger whose contributions exemplify one of Otterbein’s Five Cardinal Experiences.

All of the award winners were introduced by their nominator or a faculty or staff member who had an impact on their lives while at Otterbein. Friends, family and members of the Otterbein community came to celebrate their achievements and hear how their experiences at Otterbein shaped their personal and professional paths. By the end of the evening, stories of resilience, learning, opportunity and giving back had filled the room and everyone in attendance was reminded of the meaningful impact Otterbein has on the lives of students and alumni alike.

To read award winner bios and view photos from the Ceremony or download the 2015 nomination form, visit: www.otterbein.edu/alumni/youngalumniawards.
