Otterbein College Security is on target to become an official police authority by July 1, 2010. “We’re still in transition,” said Larry Banaszak, director of security. “We’ll make the full transition when we’re fully prepared and equipped.”

Current security officers have received training and certification through the Ohio Peace Officer Training Commission (OPOTC) and were commissioned as police officers last February. “It’s going very smoothly,” said Banaszak. “It just takes time.”

Currently the department is focusing on the administrative and legal requirements necessary for the conversion, such as proper policies and procedures, hiring standards and officer contracts, among others. A variety of updates to current equipment is necessary as well. Existing security vehicles will be modified with police computer systems and lights, and officers will undergo background checks and complete advanced training. Some new equipment will also be purchased, including computers, radios, handguns, tasers and pepper spray.

As a police authority, “it’s an added level of safety and security and quicker service to the campus,” said Banaszak. As security, officers can hold a scene; however, they cannot take action until the Westerville Police Department (WPD) arrives.
which on average is a few minutes later than security’s response. Under their new authority, campus police will have the power to respond to crimes in action and provide quicker service. “We know all of the nooks and crannies on campus,” Banaszak said. “We’ll be able to respond quicker.”

According to Banaszak, the Otterbein police department will have the authority to stop and detain, arrest, deter crimes in progress, conduct searches and seizures and investigate criminal activity. “We’ll be doing all of the things any regular police force does,” he added.

Otterbein police will only have jurisdiction over campus property and they’ll work out mutual agreements with Westerville Police Department to respond to private residences and the streets surrounding campus.

While the transition is already in progress, different aspects of the program will be phased in over the next four years, starting with the department’s official recognition next July.

According to a presentation given last February to the Board of Trustees, most new equipment will be purchased and select staff will have salaries adjusted in the first two years. By 2013, when everything is finished, the switch will require a total budget increase of $183,414.

Feedback thus far has been “overwhelmingly positive,” Banaszak said. “Administrators have been very proactive and many other colleges have switched as well, it’s really the way of the future.”

Evolutionary Scientist Featured in 19th Science Lecture Series

Two hundred years after Charles Darwin’s birth and 150 years after the publication of his On the Origin of Species, scientists are studying evolution at the molecular level. Sean B. Carroll, widely recognized as the leading public voice of evolutionary science in the U.S. today, discussed foundational questions of evolutionary biology in his lecture, “Remarkable Creatures: Epic Adventures in the Search for the Origins of Species.” The lecture was held on Tuesday, Oct. 27, in Riley Auditorium in the Battelle Fine Arts Center.

A fellow of the American Academy of Arts & Sciences, Dr. Carroll is a much sought after speaker at venues such as the American Museum of Natural History and the Field Museum in Chicago. He is a professor of molecular biology and genetics and an investigator with the Howard Hughes Medical Institute at the University of Wisconsin. His research has centered on the genes that control animal body patterns and play major roles in the evolution of animal diversity. Major discoveries from his laboratory have been featured in TIME, US News & World Report, The New York Times, Discover and Natural History.

Regarding his latest book, Remarkable Creatures, Dr. Carroll states: “I like to tell stories at the intersection of natural history with molecular biology, where we can explain how some aspect of a remarkable creature evolved. The natural history of some creature is what first engages me or my audiences, but we now have the means to know not just what exists, but to understand how it came to be. That power makes for a deeper and much more complete understanding of evolution and the history of life.”

Dr. Carroll’s lecture at Otterbein coincided with the opening of the newly renovated Science Center and is the 19th Science Lecture Series.
Otterbein will host a lecture by 2010 Pack Distinguished Lecturer Dee Dee Myers on Feb. 24, 2010. Myers served as White House press secretary under President Clinton from 1993-1994 and is a political analyst and commentator, contributing editor to Vanity Fair and author of Why Women Should Rule the World. Myers is an expert on the issues facing women in Washington and in leadership positions of all kinds and one of the top commentators on national elections, the players and the issues.

Dee Dee Myers is the first woman and one of the youngest people ever to serve as White House press secretary. During the first years of the Clinton Administration, Myers explained the actions of the new president to a vigilant press corps and to the nation. She earned the respect of both with her sharp political instincts, sense of humor and ability to explain complex subjects in straightforward language. Since leaving the White House, Myers has worked as a political analyst, commentator and writer.

Myers is currently a contributing editor to Vanity Fair magazine and a frequent political commentator on NBC and MSNBC. After leaving the White House, Myers was an original consultant to the NBC series, The West Wing, and contributed story lines and technical advice throughout its prizewinning long run. In March of 1999, Gov. Gray Davis appointed Myers to the California State University Board of Trustees. The Board sets policy for the 23-campus Cal State system, the largest public university in the world.

Myers’ book, Why Women Should Rule the World, considers the question: What would happen if women ruled the world? Blending memoir, social history, and a call to action, Myers challenges us to imagine a not-too-distant future in which increasing numbers of women reach the top ranks of politics, business, science and academia. Reflecting on her own experiences in the political arena, Myers assesses the crucial but long-ignored strengths that female leaders bring to the table. “Women tend to be better communicators, better listeners, better at forming consensus,” Myers argues. In a highly competitive and increasingly fractious world, women possess the kind of critical problem-solving skills that are urgently needed to break down barriers, build understanding and create the best conditions for peace.

Before joining the Clinton campaign in 1991, Myers worked on a variety of local, state and national campaigns. She served as press secretary for Dianne Feinstein in her 1990 bid for governor, and worked on the presidential campaigns of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Vice President Walter F. Mondale. She also worked on the staffs of Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley and California State Senator Art Torres.

Myers also spent two years as the liberal co-host of the CNBC talk show Equal Time, discussing daily political developments with conservative co-hosts Mary Matalin and later, Bay Buchanan. She left the show in 1997.

Myers is 1983 graduate of Santa Clara University. She lives in Washington, D.C. with her husband, Todd S. Purdum, national editor for Vanity Fair, and their daughter, Kate, and son, Stephen.

The Vernon L. Pack Scholar-in-Residence and Distinguished Lecture Series was established through a gift from alumnus Vernon L. Pack, a 1950 graduate of the College and resident of Westerville, Ohio. The Series seeks to address important current issues that allow the Otterbein community to reflect on ethical, spiritual and social issues and to enrich the educational experiences of Otterbein students.
English Prof Named Ohio Poet of the Year

Terry Hermsen, professor of poetry, composition and literature in the Department of English, has been named Ohio co-Poet of the Year for 2009 for his book The River’s Daughter.

Jeff Gundy, author of Spoken Among the Trees, describes the 112-page, paperback book of poems that incorporates riddles and inkblots: “From luminous evocations of childhood and place, to riddles so beautifully, lucidly obscure that they crack my mind open like an egg, to explorations of inkblots and loves old and new, Terry Hermsen’s The River’s Daughter is filled with pleasure, challenge, and nourishment. Hermsen is a subtle, bold lover of both words and the world; he confronts their perils bravely even as he sings their joys.”

Hermsen has participated in the Ohio Arts Council’s Artists in the Schools program, teaching in art galleries in Oberlin, Toledo and Cleveland, as well as teaching at the Columbus Museum of Art. He is the author of several collections of poetry, including Thirty Six Spokes: The Bicycle Poems, and with David Garrison edited the food-poem anthology Taste and See.

New VP for Institutional Advancement Named

Otterbein College has hired Heidi L. Tracy as the new vice president for Institutional Advancement. Tracy has 14 years of successful and comprehensive advancement experience in higher education, including past development experience at Carnegie Mellon University and Ohio University. She assumed the post Nov. 2.

“Heidi brings major gift, campaign, and staff development experience from Carnegie Mellon University. Recruiting someone with her leadership skills will bring new levels of opportunity for Otterbein College. I look forward to working with her to launch an ambitious agenda for the institution,” said President Kathy Kreidl.

Tracy has served as vice president for individual giving at Carnegie Mellon since August 2006. She oversaw a staff of over 50 development officers in annual giving, major gifts, planned giving, international development and parents’ leadership giving programs. The team produces approximately $20 million in new commitments each year for Carnegie Mellon.

Prior to her position at Carnegie Mellon, Tracy served the development office at Ohio University from 1995-2006, as assistant dean for development, assistant director for major gifts and most recently, director for major gifts. In that time, she secured more than $37 million for the university, including a $15 million corporate foundation gift to name the Scripps College of Communication.

Tracy earned her bachelor’s degree in journalism from the E.W. Scripps School of Journalism at Ohio University in 1989.

Mortar Board Gets National Award

The Teleiotes chapter of Mortar Board at Otterbein College was among the outstanding chapters to be honored for their excellence at the 2009 Mortar Board National Conference.

The group received the Silver Torch Award, presented to chapters executing timeliness and dedication while exemplifying the ideals of scholarship, leadership and service.

Chapter President Hannah DeMilla was present to accept the chapter’s award.

Mortar Board is a national honor society that recognizes college seniors for outstanding achievement in scholarship, leadership and service.
Second Class Inducted into Athletic HOF

The Otterbein College Athletic Hall of Fame welcomed nine inductees on Saturday, Oct. 3 prior to the football game against Heidelberg University.

“Top to bottom, the whole class is really well-deserving of this honor,” said Tim Doup, assistant athletic director and chair of the selection committee. The nine inductees were selected for their significant contributions to Otterbein’s athletic programs, either as athletes or in supporting roles. Harold F. Augspurger ’41 took full advantage of the athletic opportunities offered at Otterbein College from 1937-1941. During this time, Harold earned 10 letters in football, basketball, baseball, and track and field and was captain of the 1941 Otterbein basketball team, leading the way while earning second team All-Ohio and Ohio Conference honors. As a student athlete, Augspurger served as president of Varsity “O” and was active in many areas of campus. His contributions to Otterbein go beyond athletics as well with his service on the

Lacrosse Comes to Otterbein

Otterbein has announced the appointment of Colin Hartnett as the college’s first head men’s lacrosse coach. Hartnett, 28, has been the assistant coach for the men’s lacrosse team at St. John Fisher College in Pittsford, N.Y., since he graduated from the College of Wooster in 2003. Otterbein is expected to begin varsity competition in spring of 2010.

“Colin is a young and enthusiastic coach from a good NCAA Division III school out East. He has several ties within the central Ohio area and we are excited to get the program started,” said Athletic Director Dick Reynolds.

“I am very excited to have the opportunity that Dick Reynolds and everyone at Otterbein College has given me,” said Hartnett, a native of Canandaigua, N.Y. “I think that the College is committed to building a successful lacrosse program that will be consistent with the high level of athletics at the school.”

In his five years at St. John Fisher, Hartnett helped build a team from the ground up and take it to the Eastern College Athletic Conference (ECAC) playoffs three years in a row and to a school best 11-3 record in 2008.

He served as the offensive coordinator in 2004 and 2005 at St. John Fisher, and as the defensive coordinator since 2006. While offensive coordinator, the team finished the 2005 season averaging 10.8 goals a game, an increase over the 8.3 average in 2004. As defensive coordinator, the defensive unit improved to 28th of 130 teams in the country, allowing just 7.3 goals an outing in 2008, a sharp drop from the 13.4 average in 2004.

Hartnett received his bachelor’s degree in history from Wooster in 2003. He earned four varsity letters in lacrosse, finishing his career as the school’s fourth all-time leading scorer. As a freshman, Hartnett scored 52 points and was runner-up for the North Coast Athletic Conference (NCAC) Newcomer of the Year award. He was a two-time member of the All-NCAC team and served as team captain his junior season.

“The Midwest has developed as a hotbed of high school lacrosse and the addition of a varsity program will greatly benefit the school. I look forward to working with everyone at Otterbein in preparation for the 2010 season. I am excited to return to Ohio and make roots in the Westerville area,” said Hartnett.
Otterbein College Board of Trustees from 1966-2006. Now an honorary trustee, Augspurger has made an everlasting mark on both athletics and Otterbein College.

Kenneth L. Zarbaugh '50 was a four-year letterman and one of the best running backs to ever play football at Otterbein College. Sixty years later, he still holds three school records, including most total touchdowns and most rushing touchdowns in one game with five against both Oberlin and Ashland, and the most rushing touchdowns in a single season with 19. His record of scoring five touchdowns in one game is still good for third all-time in the OAC. He was a first-team All-OAC selection in 1949. Zarbaugh also coached and taught at Otterbein from 1956 to 1965.

Harry Ewing H'54 was known as “Mr. Athletics” at Otterbein College from 1934-1958, when he was the athletic director, the coach of all sports, trainer, and physical education director. After playing football at the University of Nebraska and earning a law degree, Ewing joined Otterbein during the midst of the Great Depression and resurrected the athletic program, which was in dire shape at the time. During his career as a coach at Otterbein, Ewing compiled an 18-7-3 record in football, a 45-15 record in basketball, and a 12-6 record in baseball. For his impact on athletics at Otterbein, the track in the Rike Center is named in his memory.

Gary Reynolds '64 earned 12 varsity letters, participating in football, basketball and track. He was a second team All-OAC selection as a half back and one of the top rushers in the conference. During his senior year, he was voted tri-captain of the football team, captain of the basketball team and co-captain of the track team. In 1964 he was named the most valuable senior football and track athlete and was recipient of the Augspurger-Ballenger Cup given to the outstanding senior athlete-sportsman. The brother of fellow inductee, Dick Reynolds '65, the two are the first brother combination to be inducted into the Otterbein College Athletic Hall of Fame.

Richard “Dick” Reynolds '65 is the most successful basketball coach in the history of the Ohio Athletic Conference. He was the first to win conference championships in four decades, has been selected as OAC coach of the year nine times, and has a 623-379 record. The Cardinals have advanced into the NCAA Division III Tournament 13 times under Reynolds’ tutelage, winning Otterbein’s first and only national championship in 2002 and reaching the Final Four in 1981 and 1991. The Cardinals have also won or shared the regular season title 11 times and won the post season tournament eight times. In 2009, Coach Reynolds was inducted into the Ohio Basketball Hall of Fame. In addition to his basketball duties, Coach Reynolds has served as the director of men’s athletics since 1992. He was also placed in charge of women’s athletics in 1998 after Otterbein combined both men’s and women’s athletics into one department. As a student-athlete at Otterbein, Reynolds earned 12 letters, four each in football, basketball and track and field. He earned all-conference honors as both quarterback and defensive back in football, and also in basketball.

Karen Fishbaugh Linder '80 completes the first father-daughter pair to ever be inducted into the Otterbein College Athletic Hall of Fame as she follows her father, Richard “Dick” Fishbaugh, by becoming the second coach in the family to be given the honor. Linder captained the softball and volleyball teams and was named Outstanding Female Athlete as a senior. With coaching in her blood, she began her career at Union College in Kentucky as the head basketball and softball coach before being offered the same positions at Ashland University in Ohio, where she stayed until 1996. During this time, Linder’s teams won three conference titles and were ranked in the nation’s top 10 in team grade-point average. She joined Kent State University in 1997 as the Head Softball Coach and, by 2007, became the winningest coach in school history. She and her father are the only father-daughter combination to win 600 career games as baseball and softball coaches in NCAA history.

The 1983 Baseball Team was the first Cardinal squad to make it to a national championship game in any sport. Led by Coach Dick Fishbaugh, team MVP Kirk McDonald, and first team All-OAC selections Mike Blythe and Bret Brownfield, the Cardinals would make it to the NCAA College World Series after winning the conference championship. Beating their archrivals, the Marietta Pioneers, in the championship of the OAC Southern Division and again in the first game of the NCAA Division III World Series, the club would lose to North Carolina Wesleyan before winning two more games and setting the stage for a classic matchup in the national championship game against Marietta. Although the team would ultimately lose, the success of the 1983 team highlighted Otterbein baseball as one of the best Division III programs in the country.

Richard “Dick” Hempy ’87 was one of the best players to ever don an Otterbein Cardinal jersey. Over the course of his four years at Otterbein, Dick was a four-time All-OAC selection, a two-time OAC Player of the Year, a three-time All-America, and the 1985-86 NCAA Division III Player of the Year. By the time he graduated, he held five school records, including most points scored in a game (52), most points scored in a season (824), most field goals made in a season (298), most free throws made in a season (228), and best career field-goal percentage (63.8). With Hempy as the heart and soul of the team, Otterbein won three conference titles and made three NCAA appearances. Hempy was inducted into the Ohio Basketball Hall of Fame in 2007.

JoAnn Tyler H’95 decided to join the Otterbein College Women’s Physical Education Department in the fall of 1962 after meeting fellow Otterbein Athletic Hall of Fame member Marilyn Day ’53. During the course of her 35 years at Otterbein, she was highly regarded for her expertise in elementary physical education and known for her dedication to the art of teaching. In addition to her academic responsibilities, Tyler coached women’s tennis from 1965-1972 and from 1979-1991. Her 1986 team won the Ohio Athletic Conference Championship.

New Minor in Leadership Studies Offered

The development of student leadership has always been a focus at Otterbein. This year, that focus will occur both in and out of the classroom.

Beginning this fall, a minor in leadership studies is available for traditional undergraduate students as a means to help them develop the leadership skills necessary to have significant impacts on their communities and workplaces.

“Leadership is absolutely essential for a student’s development,” said John Kengla, who facilitated the leadership committee’s process and developed the third course.

The minor will “prepare students for society by developing the skills for leading groups and organizations and becoming effective change agents,” said John Ludlum, chairperson of the curriculum committee. The minor will also aid students interested in entrepreneurship.

Through four core leadership classes, students combine theory, perspective, skills and practice while also exploring their individual leadership potential. Students encourage social change and community development and interact with community leaders while participating in service-learning projects and ultimately improving their communities.

In a final leadership project during the student’s senior year, students “identify a specific challenge where they can make a change using their leadership skills,” said Ludlum. “Experience is a part of each class. You have to put students in a position where they’re applying their skills and evaluating themselves,” he added.

Ludlum projected between 20-40 students will eventually enter the program each year; however, the number will depend on the flexibility and requirements of semester schedules.
Name: Uwe Trittmann

Title: Associate Professor of Physics and Astronomy

Education: Physics Diploma, University of Heidelberg, Germany; Dr. rer. nat., Max Planck Institute for Nuclear Physics, Heidelberg, Germany.

Which particular topic do you most enjoy teaching? One topic is certainly the advanced physics course of particle physics, since this is my area of expertise. However, I got into physics because I wanted to become an astronomer, so teaching the Integrative Studies astronomy course is a great joy, too. Additionally, I started the astronomy lecture series “Starry Monday” at Otterbein. Every first Monday of the month there is a lecture on an astronomical topic, and we go up to the Weitkamp Observatory for observing afterwards, weather permitting and public welcome. That’s fun for everyone involved.

Why should every person you meet want to know more about your area of expertise? High Energy Physics is arguably the most fundamental field of science. It tries to describe how the elementary, i.e. not further divisible, particles of nature interact with one another. In a reductionist world view everything else in science follows from our understanding of these fundamental interactions. Even if you don’t subscribe to this point of view, it is wonderful to think that you are studying nature at its deepest level.

What research are you currently conducting/projects are you currently working on? I am a theoretical physicist and typically do my calculations numerically, i.e. using a computer. My latest research paper is being published this month and deals with the masses of the bound states of a (brace yourself) supersymmetric quantum field theory. I was able to come up with a new term in the equations that give mass to some of the elementary particles in this theory while keeping the symmetry intact. I studied the dependence of the bound-state mass on the mass of the constituents. Think of this as a toy model for the system one really wants to understand: the proton, one of the constituents of the atomic nucleus. In the modern view, the proton is itself a bound-state of quarks, today believed to be truly elementary, in a theory called Quantum Chromodynamics.

If you were not an educator, what would be your dream job? This is a tough one, since I basically have my dream job. The reason I say this is my conviction that a balanced life is important, work being an integral part of it. As a professor I can be an educator, a researcher, an outreach person, and contribute to the College’s educational policies and visions. All of these duties are challenging me as a person, and are able to generate frustrating as well as euphoric moments. A balanced mix of responsibilities creates synergy, thereby avoiding unproductive phases, constituting a self-rejuvenating process, and, averaged over time, keeping me positively satisfied, happy, and creative. Last but not least, my work will advance students’ education and progress in scientific research, however tiny my contribution may be. As exciting as it sounds to be an artist, craftsman, or some kind of self-employed (or independently rich!)

learned person, I think I wouldn’t do well in the long run without a minimal structure of responsibilities.

What are your hobbies outside the classroom? A lot of my free time is spent with my family: my wife Jennifer, a busy pediatrician and neonatal fellow, and our almost two-year old, Arthur. I’m pretty strict about going on a big ride with my trekking bike once a week, often in the Hocking Hills region. Caring for a hundred-year-old house with a large garden is fun for me, although for every project finished it seems there are two new ones popping up. Free time hasn’t been all that available lately, but I’ve been into backyard astronomy observing and a bit of painting and drawing in years past. Needless to say, I enjoy reading as much as I can.

The Otterbein community gathered on Friday, Oct. 23, in the foyer of Memorial Stadium to honor and pay tribute to Otterbein's fallen heroes.

President Kathy Krendl and Board Chair Tom Morrison '63, along with Vice President for Student Affairs Bob Gatti, dedicated a plaque honoring 12 Otterbein soldiers who were killed in action, in the wars and conflicts since World War II.

In 1946, veterans returning to Otterbein from WWII organized a campaign to raise funds for a new stadium meant to honor the veterans who lost their lives during WWII. Otterbein dedicated "Memorial Stadium" in 1948 in recognition of the veteran's efforts and support for the College.

"It is fitting," said Gatti, "that we stand here again today to honor other young men who made the ultimate sacrifice for our country – for us."

The names on the plaque include soldiers killed in action after WWII. They are:

Arthur Sapp '51 – Electronics technician third class, United States Navy, drowned while stationed at Norfolk Naval Air Base 07-13-1951.

Arnold William Lamp, Jr. '64 – Captain, United States Air Force KIA (plane crash over Vietnam) 04-12-1969.

Peter H. Chapman II '62 – Captain, United States Air Force, KIA (helicopter he was piloting downed during a rescue mission) 04-06-1972.

Douglas C. Topping '65 – Major, United States Air Force, died while serving at Wright-Patterson AFB, July 1976.

Terry Quinn McCammon '68 – Captain, United States Air Force, killed in training mission over eastern New Mexico 10-14-1981.

Samuel F. Pearson '03 – Corporal, United States Army, KIA (rocket attack, Camp Victory, Iraq) 10-10-2007.

Roger Vickers '65 – Details unknown.

Wayne Moonjiam '65 – Details unknown.

Director of CCE Finishes Year as Engaged Scholar

Melissa Gilbert, director of the Center for Community Engagement, recently wrapped up one year's worth of national service as one of 10 2008-2009 Engaged Scholars for New Perspectives in Higher Education, on behalf of Campus Compact, a higher education association dedicated to campus-based civic engagement.

The scholars’ year-long service culminated in a book, The Future of Service Learning: New Solutions for Sustaining and Improving Practice, that was published in August. As part of her work, Gilbert co-wrote one of the book’s chapters about fostering interdependent community partnerships.

“We came together as national leaders to turn out a new direction for service learning as a field,” said Gilbert. “We discussed hurdles and barriers, and moving forward and enhancing community involvement.”

Although Gilbert’s appointment lasted only one year, her national work is just getting started. Gilbert will now participate in numerous panels promoting the book and speak about the group’s work at conferences and events across the country.

“It was an honor to work with such an amazing group of colleagues, all of whom are helping to shift dialogue to take into account issues important to our field,” said Gilbert. “We were able to bring cross-discipline and national dialogue to the forefront and form visions we wanted to create together.”

Otterbein officially opened its new Science Center, which has undergone a $20 million renovation and addition, at a ceremony on Oct. 9.

President Kathy Krendl welcomed the audience, which filled the Foote Atrium, to the ceremonial opening. Board Chair Tom Morrison '63 and Board member Ted Huston '57 each thanked the many donors and committee members who helped make the new center possible.

Recent graduate Sadie Bartholomew '07, who is currently pursuing her doctorate degree in biochemistry at Stanford University, then took the podium to talk about the excellent education she received despite the former condition of the building. “While I have found that I am as prepared as, and in some cases more prepared than, my classmates at Stanford, I can only imagine what the current students will be able to accomplish in this new center,” she said.

Bartholomew is currently a National Science Foundation Graduate Research Fellow and the recipient of the Cellular and Molecular Biology Training Grant through the National Institutes of Health, which both cover her tuition and provide an additional stipend.

The keys to the Center were then given to students Anna Haller '10, Troy Burton '11 and Justin Young '10. Haller and Burton are student trustees, and Young is a Goldwater Fellow.

While touring the Center after the ceremony, attendees could view research posters presented by current students, visit a laboratory with an experiment-in-progress to determine a link between diet and internal temperatures in turtles, check out the medical technologies available in the nursing labs and discuss the plants inside the new greenhouse with Professor of Life and Earth Sciences Jeff Lehman.

“The renovations have improved the functionality as much as the aesthetics of our facilities,” said

The sciences are a critical part of a liberal arts education. The investors noted here have committed their support to bringing together the different science disciplines in a strong, integrated program that is ready to meet the challenges of the 21st century. Otterbein College is grateful to have wonderful and caring alumni, individuals, corporations, foundations and community partners who believe in our mission and support our vision.

Lehman. “Students are working in healthier and safer laboratories, which will have a positive influence on their educational experiences.”

Over 200 donors have supported the Science Center to date. The 135-room complex includes a renovation of the existing facility and a 30,000 square foot addition on the south side of the building. The project began in June 2007 and was completed in February 2009.

The facility features a new greenhouse and an atrium and brings the departments together in modules that include a large teaching lab, a small project lab and an office representing a discipline. This atmosphere will make the transition to graduate or medical schools easier for science students by providing modern laboratory equipment in an interdisciplinary, hands-on environment.

"I want to pursue that image of a shining light as we reflect on the history of Otterbein College and connect its origin in the mid-19th century with the 21st century and beyond."

Dr. Kathy A. Krendl, 20th President of Otterbein College
The inauguration of Kathy A. Krendl as 20th president of Otterbein College on Oct. 23 was a celebration of Otterbein’s roots and a glimpse into its future.

“Since 1847 women and men together have thought, taught, studied and lived in every square inch of this place,” she said. “Their ambitions, their beliefs, their toil and their treasure built Otterbein College, which like a shining light, has graced the city of Westerville, the state of Ohio and our nation.

“I want to pursue that image of a shining light as we reflect on the history of Otterbein College and connect its origins in the mid-19th century with the 21st century and beyond,” President Krendl continued. “Drawing these connections between past and present will help determine how we will act in shining that light into the future, setting the course for the generations to come.”

President Krendl first shared her reflections on Otterbein’s past. “The current seal of Otterbein College was adopted in 1926. There is a lamp on the seal emitting beams of light,” she said. “Light as a symbol of knowledge, learning and insight permeates our language. It is an appropriate symbol for Otterbein College because enlightened knowledge is the core of the Otterbein experience. Our faculty have been turning on the light of learning for students for 162 years.”

President Krendl continued by recounting stories from students and alumni, representing all generations, about the lessons they learned while at Otterbein and the sacrifices families have made to ensure their children received an Otterbein education.

She specifically recalled one woman’s story at a recent alumni event. The woman’s father had resigned as a minister in the Evangelical United Brethren Church and taken a custodial position at Otterbein so his three children could receive their undergraduate degrees courtesy of the institution. “He knew the value of an Otterbein education far exceeded anything else he could give his children, so he found a way to make it possible,” she said.

“Otterbein’s shining light serves as a beacon of hope for those who have great ambitions and great potential but for whom the distance seems impossibly far to traverse,” President Krendl continued. “Yet time and time again, as the stories go, some minor miracle occurs and the seemingly impossible becomes possible.”

President Krendl then discussed the connections she has seen between the past, present and future, between the generations of Cardinals, and between Otterbein and communities both local and across the world. “At Otterbein connections are about relationships, and I have learned in recent months that friendships that begin here are built to last,” she said.

She shared a story of two women who travel across the country every year to attend a weekend alumni gathering together. “They no longer have to don the dresses, white gloves and flowery hats required at College events when they were students,” President Krendl said. “Now they come prepared for what amounts to a 72-hour slumber party.”

Relationships, however, aren’t the only connections Otterbein students...
She recalled the story of a 90-year-old 1940 graduate who, after his time at Otterbein, had returned home to Sierra Leone. "His determination to continue to serve, to continue to support, to continue to shine his light among his people was humbling," she said. "He was connected to Otterbein, but he was also connected to his country, and his education here had provided him the necessary tools and skills to help his people."

This particular story exemplified a common theme in Otterbein's history—preparing for a life of service. "Otterbein graduates are engaged citizens who make a difference in others' lives," President Krendl said. "It's a proud and honorable tradition, and it sets Otterbein apart."

Finally, President Krendl called on members of the Otterbein family to act to bring about a better Otterbein and a better world. She recounted the stories of two men fundamental to the establishment of Otterbein—Lewis Davis and William Hanby—without whom Otterbein would not exist. "These stories of Lewis Davis and William Hanby illustrate something basic about Otterbein—it is an institution that to this day will not be still. In the face of challenges, Otterbein has always refused to retreat. It has not turned back, it has moved ever forward, carrying with it the enduring values of an institution founded on progressive ideals," President Krendl said.

President Krendl ended her address with a call to action for Otterbein's past, present and future generations. "Today I propose that we go against the grain and turn away from the humility and modesty that have characterized Otterbein in the past," she said. "I would like to challenge each of you to abandon the idea that Otterbein is a hidden gem, a well kept secret. Instead, I ask you to celebrate Otterbein and its ideals. In the days ahead, I ask each of you to reflect, connect and act in your own way on behalf of Otterbein College," President Krendl concluded. "Carry the light of learning out into the world. And in the process, let us pledge anew, that we will be true, to our dearest Otterbein."

Kathy Krendl is undeniably an Ohio girl. She grew up on a farm near Spencerville in northwest Ohio, on land that was once thought to be part of the Great Black Swamp. Otterbein’s 20th president got her start in flatlands where ash, elm, cottonwood and sycamores line the banks of the Miami and Erie Canal. Route 66 (that’s STATE Route 66) angles through the town of 2,000 and along the canal, which roughly divides the town into east and west halves.
One of six children, Kathy Krendl and her siblings worked the family row crop farm. When she was around 11 or 12, her father turned the management of the farm over to the kids, so they could earn money for their college educations. This would begin her experiences in business and management, long before she ever graduated from high school.

“We (the children) began a produce market. Each one of us was assigned management of the farm for three years. It was our responsibility to see that the planting got done, the produce markets had the materials and supplies they needed. We had a couple of grocery contracts. A&P was a big contract for us,” Krendl said.

“It gave each of us an opportunity to gain experience in managing and running a farm operation. There was a lot of orchestration to pull everything together. It took a lot of management, teamwork and training. I think that was my parents’ intentions, to show us we needed to understand each other’s strengths and weaknesses, and each of us had certain responsibilities. Everyone had an area of expertise, so it took everyone working together to get the job done.”

It was also each child’s responsibility to research and pursue admittance into the colleges of their choice. Through that, Krendl’s college career began early. “As a high school student I did some summer coursework—before the crops came in—at Ohio Northern, Bowling Green and Ohio University. It was good getting my feet wet at different colleges and different campus environments. It was hard work along with the farm work.”

Off to College in Wisconsin

But when it came time to pick a college, she chose a small liberal arts college, Lawrence University, in Wisconsin. “The scholarship they offered was attractive, but I just liked small liberal arts colleges in the Midwest. I liked the appearance of the campus, liked the people I talked to, and liked the size of it,” she said.
After receiving her undergraduate degree in English, she began teaching high school English at Wapakoneta, OH, where she served as the advisor to the school newspaper. This early interest in journalism pushed her toward The Ohio State University, where, going to night school while teaching, she earned her master’s degree in journalism. She eventually earned her doctorate degree from the University of Michigan while she taught at Ohio State.

And no, as a graduate of both universities she refuses to take sides on the storied OSU-Michigan rivalry. “I try not to fall on either side,” she said with a slightly sly smile.

In her career, Krendl has stayed close to her Midwest ties, serving for 13 years at both Indiana University and then Ohio University. At the former she served as professor and chair of the Department of Telecommunications and as dean of the system-wide School of Continuing Studies with offices on all eight IU campuses. At OU, she served as the dean of the Scripps College of Communication for eight years before becoming provost in 2004. In 2007, her responsibilities there were expanded to executive vice president and provost.

A Special Place—and its Issues

Now that she’s had some time on the job and to soak up the culture of Otterbein, what are her initial impressions? “The strongest initial impressions are around the special nature of the place and the way in which people respond to it,” she said. “What has been striking to me has been that a lot of the conversations I’ve had with people—alumni and students—are directly about the academic experience, which I think is great. Alumni will remember a particular professor and something that he or she said. That academic connection resonates with the history of the institution and the idea of being a college of opportunity. People engaged intellectually at the institution, and it did open a lot of doors of opportunity for them.”

Clearly, she already has a passion for this place called Otterbein that so many have come to experience and love. But having a proud tradition and storied history will not necessarily carry you through tomorrow. Where are we going? And what, right now, are our most pressing issues? “I think the most pressing issue right now is the need of the College to define itself clearly in the marketplace for recruiting. That goes directly to the budget, as we are a tuition-dependent institution. But I don’t want to say the budget is the most important issue, because that’s probably true for everyone. Our unique challenge is finding the right way to define Otterbein as the destination of choice for the right students. We’ve depended heavily on legacy students and students from the immediate region. We need to be better known, we need to be better and more clearly defined, and we need to be developing plans and striving to reach those goals.”

When asked to look five years ahead, and define what Otterbein’s most pertinent issues will be in that time period, she said, “We have some work to do in terms of some basic infrastructure that we need to attend to in our information technology area. We need to look at our campus facilities from a master planning process and think about where we see our growth taking place. If we meet the targets that are identified in the strategic plan, clearly we are going to be growing in some areas and we need to make sure our facilities are keeping pace with that growth.”

Krendl sees most of our physical facilities as being in good shape, but there are some areas of concern. “I think the Campus Center is a challenge for us and we need to determine how we’re going to proceed in using it as a hub for university activities. It looks dated, it’s not terribly welcoming, so I think we need to do some work on that. But that needs to be done as part of a master plan, not just by itself.”

She also sees work needing to be done in the area of Continuing Studies. “We need to regain some ground in terms of serving continuing studies and adult students. We did at one time have a robust program and I think we’ve lost a little bit of that because of the lack of clarity of our particular role in that marketplace and there’s just a lot more competition out there now. That’s where we projected a lot of our growth and set some goals, so we need to really look seriously at that pool of students and determine what we can do well in delivering the kinds of programming and the quality of programming we want to deliver in which students will succeed and in which there is great demand.”
The connection with the surrounding community is another area of importance for her. “Working effectively with Westerville is critical to our future. I’ve found good partners in the leadership at the city level and they seem very interested in seeing Otterbein flourish just as it’s in our best interest to see Westerville flourish. Working on that town-gown relationship, making sure that continues to be healthy and sustainable and productive for both parties is another important avenue of opportunity for us.” Krendl sees Otterbein sharing its facilities with the community to the betterment of all. “We have a wonderful new addition to the Science Center, and a wonderful new equine facility, but there’s no reason Otterbein has to keep those new additions to ourselves. They should be a community resource that we share with the community. We can use them to gain visibility, to provide educational opportunities for students and all kinds of audiences from the immediate community. I think there’s wonderful potential in those new facilities that we’re just beginning to bring into focus. We need to look at those resources in new ways to really maximize the potential to advance the institution. I think that’s something that everyone has to be thinking about.”

On Change, Students... and What it Means to be Otterbein’s First Woman President

With Otterbein looking at the possibility of aligning its name to Otterbein University, with quarters going by the wayside for semesters in 2011, with the addition of more graduate programs and with ever growing enrollment numbers, some wonder if Otterbein is changing too quickly or if perhaps it might be losing some of its small college charm and getting too big. What does our new president think of this?

“We need to be very clear as to what it is we want to hang onto. And in my mind it is the core enduring values of Otterbein. Things like serving as a college of opportunity, focusing on a life of service, engaging in community service, giving back, working for the good of all people. Those kinds of values, the idea of lifelong learning, the idea of inclusiveness and diversity, all of those are core values we can trace way back in the history of Otterbein College. If that is what we want to hold onto, I think it’s quite possible for us to do that by being very clear, by being very consistent in the way we talk about those kinds of values and the way in which we instill those values to our students who come here. So that’s part of the answer.

“The second part of the answer is we have multiple missions. We have an adult graduate professional mission, we have a continuing studies mission, and we have an undergraduate mission. That’s not new. That’s been part of Otterbein’s character for many years. Many Otterbein alumni look at their own experiences as being unique and small and intimate, and I think we can retain that in the undergraduate residential program. A small faculty-to-student ratio will maintain those characteristics and will keep those enduring values in that context. But that doesn’t necessarily translate to what we are doing in graduate and professional education and to what we are doing in continuing studies. When we talk about the Otterbein experience, for each of those groups it’s a little bit different. And most of the growth is actually projected for the graduate, professional and adult audiences, not the undergraduate audiences. So I think it’s quite possible for us to have it both ways. I don’t think we’re changing the nature of the undergraduate experience nor are we abandoning our core values. We’re simply finding 21st century ways of fulfilling that mission and maintaining those values.

Our 20th president, much like our 19th, has a real affinity for our students and interacting with them. She plans informal get-togethers, focus groups, and of course, involvement in community projects. “A number of students have given me comments about the kinds of things they’d like me to take a look at, like our web presence, like creating a wireless campus, ideas that drive us forward or enable us to move forward in terms of technology. I’m also interested in sitting down with students and talking to them about what attracted them to Otterbein College. I know for many of them it was a legacy/family kind of connection, but there are lots of other students who are coming here and I want to understand more about that as we try to clarify our identity in the marketplace. I want to be clear about what it is that is attracting our current students here. Clearly our academic programs are key to that, but I think there have to be other kinds of identifiers that Otterbein is known for that are important to this generation of students. I have been invited to some of the group meetings, student activity meetings, those kinds of things and of course I’ve met with the students in all of the orientation programs. I participated in the fall community plunge day, and we’re talking about going on some more of the service learning trips. You really get to know students in those kinds of environments. Inside the classroom and outside the classroom, I’ll get to know the students.”

Keen interest in students is one thing Krendl shares with her predecessor, Brent DeVore, who was known for his active involvement in community service and other student activities. One thing she obviously does not have in common with DeVore or any of the past presidents at Otterbein is gender. Does she feel added pressure being the first woman president at Otterbein?

“I don’t think I feel added pressure, I think I feel a great sense of pride. I was the first woman dean on the campus of Indiana University in Bloomington and I was the first woman dean at the Scripps College of Communication at Ohio University and so I’ve been the first woman in several roles. All I ever felt in terms of pressure was that the expectations were high. But expectations should be high for whoever is in those kinds of leadership roles, so for me, it’s not about being the first woman, it’s about being someone for whom there are high expectations and setting high expectations for myself. But,” she paused, reflective, “it is a special privilege to be in this situation where the strength of women in the history of the institution has been so powerful. I’m told that comes from the EUB tradition that women played a leadership role in the United Brethren Church from very early on and that sort of inclusiveness carried over from the church.”

Old School Brand of Leadership

When asked to characterize her own style of leadership, Krendl answered, “I’m old school, I think that leadership is in the way in which one lives the values of the organization and tries to reflect those, tries to lead by example in a lot of ways. Also, and I’ve thought a lot about this, you are a kind of a servant-leader, in that you are there to serve the institution. So that means you’ve got to understand the people in that institution, you’ve got to understand the institution and you have to model what you see as the inherent values of it.”

As provost at OU, Krendl faced some challenging and contentious times. What lessons from those times did she bring with her to Otterbein? “One thing that I learned is that those kinds of issues and the contentiousness are seldom personal. They really are about people in positions of leadership, people in positions of authority, people who are responsible and accountable for making decisions. What I learned in the process was to make efforts along the way to have more transparent communication. I tried to share information around budget, around

President Krendl chats with students as she hands out t-shirts at New Student Weekend this past September.
I don't think I feel added pressure (on being the first woman president), I think I feel a great sense of pride...I was the first woman in several roles. All I ever felt in terms of pressure was that the expectations were high. But expectations should be high for whoever is in those kinds of leadership roles...

Not many 75-year-olds can say their best years are still ahead. For Otterbein alumna Frances Lee (Myers) Strong ’56—better known as comedian Grandma Lee—her golden years are just getting started.

This fall, Grandma Lee became an overnight celebrity when she first performed on NBC's America's Got Talent. A fan favorite from the beginning, Lee continued to entertain week after week and landed a spot in the show’s finals. “I never imagined I’d make it to the top 10,” Lee said. “Everyone recognizes me now. It’s pretty cool.”

“It was never about the money,” she added. “I just wanted to get my name out there and go to Vegas. And I did just that.” She made it to the final show, and although she was clearly an audience favorite with them chanting her name, she eventually lost to country singer Kevin Skinner.

Lee joked on and off stage, once saying in her interview, “I told my kids one day, ‘When I die, I want you to have me cremated and take my ashes to Vegas.’ Now I have a chance to go to Vegas before my ashes do.”

Since the show’s finale, Lee and the other finalists have been performing at Planet Hollywood Resort & Casino in Las Vegas in the America's Got Talent live show. “It’s like living the dream and I’m thoroughly enjoying every minute of it,” she said.

Once the live show wraps up in December, Lee definitely won’t have trouble finding her next gig. “My manager has all kinds of things lined up,” she said. “I’ve got offers all over the country.”

Although Lee graduated from Otterbein with a degree in English education, it’s no surprise she ended up in comedy. “I love performing,” she said. “It was something I always wanted to do deep down.”

Her act is definitely hysterical but Lee’s road to comedy was not so funny. After marrying career-marine Ben Strong in 1958, Lee traveled, and lived, all over the world and started a family – three boys and one girl. She worked for the Cleveland Press and the phone company.

When Hurricane Andrew destroyed their home in Homestead, Fla., in 1992, Lee and her husband moved to Jacksonville to live with their son. Shortly after, Strong was diagnosed with cancer.

He encouraged Lee to take up a hobby while they battled the disease; and when she chose comedy, it was clearly the right decision. “The first time I went on stage, I knew it was what I wanted to do for the rest of my life,” she said.

When Strong died in 1995, Lee went into comedy full-time, and she’s been performing ever since. “It’s the most fun I’ve ever had,” she said.

Lee began performing at the Comedy Zone in Jacksonville but it didn’t take long for her act to catch on. She’s performed in multiple Las Vegas clubs and casinos, and has had a variety of television performances, including appearances on the Jenny Jones Show, HBO, BET and E! Entertainment Channel.

Over the years, Lee has performed in almost every state and has been recognized multiple times for her comedy. She won a “golden ticket” to America's Got Talent once the producers had seen her tapes, meaning she auditioned right away in Houston, not having to wait in line.

After a definite “yes” from the judges in Houston, Lee went to Vegas to start her road to the finals. “They [the judges] never had anything bad to say about me,” Lee said. “You never get tired of that.”

Lee’s risqué act was centered on jokes about her mythical ex-husband Dwayne, a behind-the-scenes romance with judges Piers Morgan and David Hasselhoff and the shortcomings of the geriatric crowd. In response to her semi-final performance, Hasselhoff responded, “You’re funny. I don’t care how old you are.”

Lee’s children, family and friends came out to Vegas whenever possible for the shows, but one special person was missing from the crowd. Lee’s husband was only able to see her perform once, but “If he could see me now, I think he’d be beaming with pride,” she said.

New Grants for Otterbein

The Ohio Department of Natural Resources, Division of Wildlife has awarded $30,942 to Michael Hoggarth of Life and Earth Sciences in support of his project “Freshwater Mussel Survey of Lake Erie Refugia: Marina, River Channel, and Marshes.” Partnering with Matt Thomas from Ohio State, Hoggarth will sample probable refugia in Lake Erie for mussels. Having recently discovered unknown communities of mussels in a marina and in river channels emptying into Lake Erie, the objective of this study is to determine if other such habitats also support mussels.

The National Collegiate Honors Council has awarded $1,000 to Cynthia Laurie-Rose, Professor of Psychology and Director of the Otterbein Honors Program, in support of her project “Kneading Minds: Integrating Service in the Otterbein College Honors Center.” In this project, honors students will begin a venture where they will come together to bake bread every two weeks, following the Social Entrepreneurial Model. Otterbein’s dining hall chefs will teach residents how to bake bread in the residence hall kitchen. A portion of the bread will be delivered to local food pantries, where it will be given away. The remainder will be sold the following morning after local religion services with the profits from the sales used to replenish baking supplies. Once a quarter, Honors students will host a group of at-risk youth who participate in service clubs at their schools and teach them to bake bread at the Honors House. The youth will then donate that bread to a local pantry.

The Department of Health and Human Services, Health Resources and Services Administration has awarded $49,159 to Otterbein in support of the Advanced Education Nurse Traineeship, which will be directed by Eda Mikolaj. This grant will offer scholarships to increase the number of advanced practice nurses who provide health services to diverse underserved populations in rural counties in Central and Appalachian Ohio where poverty and unemployment still contribute to a variety of health care problems and intensify the need for quality health care. The presence of advanced practice nurses gives people in these underserved areas increased access to health care services that include screening for health risks, health teaching, and promoting healthy lifestyles.

The Ohio Foundation of Independent Colleges has awarded $15,800 in continuing support of John Kengla’s Ubuntu College Mentoring Clubs, which is housed in Otterbein’s Center for Community Engagement. For this second year of funding, Linden-McKinley High School and Beechcroft High School eleventh and twelfth graders will attend an Otterbein communications class—COMM 190, Mentoring: Theory and Practice. In a collaborative learning setting, the college and high school students will study mentoring and writing practices, learning the importance of academic achievement, higher education opportunities, college entrance requirements, the application process, and financial aid. Then the students will conduct regular mentoring/college access sessions for ninth grade students at Linden-McKinley and Beechcroft High Schools.
Psychology professor Meredith Frey has been awarded $77,335 from the Army Research Institute in support of her project “Cognitive Task Complexity and General Intelligence.” In this research, Dr. Frey will work to establish a way to form an unbiased assessment of cognitive ability. Measures currently in use by the U.S. Army are loaded on verbal knowledge and are susceptible to environmental effects, like poor quality schools. Therefore, this research will develop a nonverbal battery of elementary cognitive tasks that more directly measure the basic processes of intelligence.

The Ohio Board of Nursing has awarded $199,608 over two years to support Professor of Nursing and Department Chair Barbara Schaffner’s project “FLAME: Fostering Leaders, Advocates, Mentors, and Educators.” Through the use of distance technology and an accelerated format Dr. Schaffner will implement the “FLAME” model with students to complete a combined Nurse Educator and Clinical Nurse Leader program leading to a Masters Degree in Nursing and a Nursing Education Certificate. These Master’s prepared nurse leaders will be encouraged to remain in their communities to improve health care quality, promote advocacy and/or serve as educators or mentors of pre-licensure nursing students.

The National Science Foundation has granted $199,409 over three years in support of Chemistry professor Dean Johnston’s project “Experimental Determination of Chemical Structure in the Undergraduate Curriculum: A Data Driven Approach.” The key goals of this project are to (1) develop a new model for integration of structural methods into the undergraduate chemistry curriculum, (2) assess student engagement and learning when working with experimental structural data, (3) establish a local user group to broaden the incorporation of X-ray diffraction methods and resources into the undergraduate curriculum, and (4) create interactive web-based materials for teaching crystallographic symmetry.

Otterbein has been awarded a sixth year of funding from Columbus City Schools to participate in the Teacher Quality Enhancement program, with this year’s award totaling $174,441. Led by Dr. Niki Fayne, Dean of the School of Professional Studies, the final year of this collaboration between the Higher Education Partnership and Columbus City Schools will continue the implementation of specialized urban teacher preparation coursework and target professional development, with a particular focus on math and science at the middle school level, to increase urban student academic achievement. The “urban teacher strand” targets Columbus City Schools in-service teachers at the apprentice and professional stages of their careers as well as pre-service teachers at the partner institutions.

So Many Ways to Show Your Otterbein Pride

by Becky F. Smith ’81

Recently at an alumni function I visited with an alumna, Deb Hills Johnson ’84, from my hall director days in Clements Hall who I had not seen for 25 years. Loretta Evan Heigle ’64, standing beside us, stated she worked on Deb’s city council campaign and realized one year ago (after being school board friends for 10 years) that they both graduated from Otterbein and were sorority sisters.

I turned around and another alumna, Melissa Barr Snider ’77, showed me her grandmother’s engagement ring which she wore intentionally to the alumni event because she was proud to be a third generation Otterbein legacy.

After the event, I was driving through an Upper Arlington neighborhood on Otterbein’s game day, and there was an Otterbein Cardinal Flag waving proudly in the breeze.

There are all kinds of ways to show your Otterbein pride. Shout your pride; wear your pride; fly your Cardinal Pride!

You are an integral part of illuminating President Krendl’s message of shining the light that is Otterbein. It’s time to demonstrate your pride through action. Consider becoming involved in helping to:

• connect careers with students
• mentor students

• create research opportunities
• host job shadowing
• recruit students (including undergraduate, graduate and continuing studies students)
